Questions?

University Environments/ Universities within their environment

Changing Places

- William Whyte (Redbrick, 2015) described university history as a kind of Rorschach blot:
 - External view: Unchanging and static.
 - Internal view: Chaotic, transitory, new 'generation' every 3 years.
 - A profession steeped in the textual world existing within an oral and aural environment.
- Old institutions vs. new institutions, motivations for their foundation
 - Keith Vernon (Universities and the State in England, 2004) discusses 'civic ideal' of 19th century institutions: philanthropy; access to HE; by, for and in their locality vs 60s 'new unis'

Institutional Record Collecting

COVERAGE AND SURVIVING RECORDS

- The archive service began officially in 1991.
- Records had been collected and kept for their historical value, for the previous 30 years or so they had been stored together as an archive (in varying environmental conditions!)
- ‘Ownership’ of records, a push-pull between views of long serving staff and pressures of space.
- Modern Day – An EDRM has been in place since 2006 which captures ‘official’ electronic records for the future.
- A Records Management Service in place from 2009 which performs an advocacy function, helps bring in historical records too.

LOCATING THE RECORDS

- Online Catalogue – From February 2016. The files won't be listed to item level or indexed. Use descriptions to decide if a series will be useful or examine series grouped in similar areas for related records.
- Set of baseline details are useful (crucial?) in beginning a search, name, DOB, any addresses from census records, father's names, etc.
- Casting a broad enough net through time – differences in educational age ranges and policy on compulsory and voluntary education. Trawling through adjacent years may be necessary.
