

New Dragonfly (Odonata) Species in Ohio, and Additions to County Records<sup>1</sup>

ROBERT C. GLOTZHOBER, ROBERT A. RESTIFO, T. EDWARD PERRY<sup>2</sup>, AND ROBERT W. ALRUTZ, Ohio Historical Society, 1982 Velma Avenue, Columbus, OH 43211, Ohio Department of Health, 900 Freeway Drive North, Columbus, OH 43229, Gates Mills, OH, Denison University, Granville, OH 43023

ABSTRACT. This report is a contribution to the Ohio Odonata Survey. Three species previously unknown for Ohio are reported as new state records: Macromia georgina (Selys), 1878, Gomphaeschna furcillata (Say), 1839, and Libellula deplanata Rambur, 1842. These records increase the number of known Odonata from Ohio to 156 species and subspecies. Also reported are 611 new county records, significantly expanding our knowledge of distribution of these species in Ohio. Comments on early or late flight dates and/or species status are made for several species. These records are based upon recent collecting and re-examination of museum collections.

OHIO J. SCI. 95 (3): 233–239, 1995

INTRODUCTION

The most recent state-wide listing of Odonata was done by Borror (1937), with over 30 more recent papers making additions to his list. In 1990 the Ohio Odonata Survey was initiated, and three recent papers (Alrutz 1992, 1993; Moody 1993) have summarized a portion of the activities of the current survey. The records reported in the present paper are previously unpublished museum records and records from field work of the authors and numerous survey volunteers.

T. Edward Perry published several significant papers on Odonata in Ohio before his untimely death in 1986 (Perry 1983). His extensive collections were donated to the Cleveland Museum of Natural History. Included in this report are numerous unpublished county records from Perry's collection.

MATERIALS AND METHODS

The authors examined existing collections for unpublished distribution records. Field collections have added more records. All records represent specimens collected and preserved in public or private collections. All data have been entered into an IBM-compatible database using PCFile 5.0 from ButtonWare. The database contains 17,297 records as of March 1995. The authors identified specimens from field collections, and selected specialists confirmed identification of problematic species. The authors confirmed identification of existing museum specimens in any cases where questionable data were apparent.

RESULTS

Specimens referred to in this report are stored in the collections noted with the records. They are arranged according to a numbering system which simplifies computer records devised for the Ohio Odonata Survey. The system is modified from the "Checking List" on page 367 in Needham and Heywood (1929). Each county record lists in order: the collector's name (for collectors who infrequently appear) or initials (for collectors who frequently appear, Table 1); the year when the specimen was collected; and the abbreviation for the holding collection (Table 2).

RCG visited the site in 1993 and 1994 but found no specimens of this species. It is likely that the two specimens collected by Morasky were blown in from Indiana. ## DISCUSSION

Alrutz previously listed 155 species of Odonata for Ohio (Alrutz 1992, 1993). Moody added Ischnura kellicotti to that number (Moody 1993). A re-evaluation of previous published records necessitates a reduction of three species. Carle (1980) described a new species, Lanthus vernalis. Carle did not list this species for Ohio, but pointed out that previous records of Lanthus parvulus may be this new species. This new species is known from Pennsylvania but has not been found in Ohio. It has been carried on the unofficial lists of the Ohio Odonata Survey, but should be removed from official species counts. Coryphaeschna ingens was listed for Ohio by Langlois (1932), refuted by Restifo (1972), but previously still carried on the Ohio Odonata Survey list. A third species, Celithemis martha, was added to the Ohio Odonata Survey list based upon a single specimen seen by Restifo in the Ohio State University collections. This specimen has not been found, and so is deleted at this time. Adding the three new state records reported in the present paper, the total number of species for Ohio is corrected to 156.

The numerous county and state records listed in the present paper may mislead the reader to thinking that Odonata all have healthy, viable populations. Records of the Ohio Odonata Survey indicate that of the 156 species known from Ohio, 37 species (24%) have been reported from only one or two counties, and many of these have not been reported in recent years. An additional 24 species are known from only three to five counties. Survey members are now concentrating on these rare species to determine which are accidental wanderers, which have stable populations with restricted distribution, which may be more abundant but overlooked, and which may be endangered or extirpated populations.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS. The survey has been supported since 1991 by the Ohio Division of Wildlife with funds donated through the DO SOMETHING WILD! state income tax checkoff. The authors appreciate access to the material in the collections of the Cleveland Museum of Natural History, made available by the generous help of Sonja Teraguchi and Gordon McCarty. The efforts of numerous enthusiastic volunteers in the Ohio Odonata Survey have made this project both possible and exciting.
