What is Web 2.0?

Web 2.0
IDEA

Originally just a network of computers...

Now a network of people

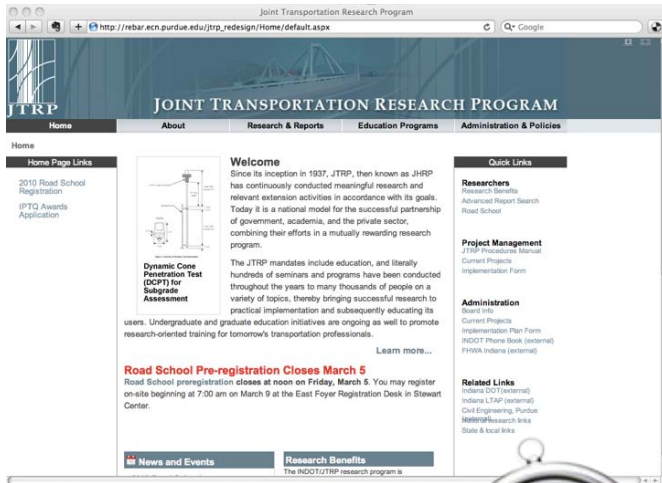

New paradigm:

People are at the center and information finds them.

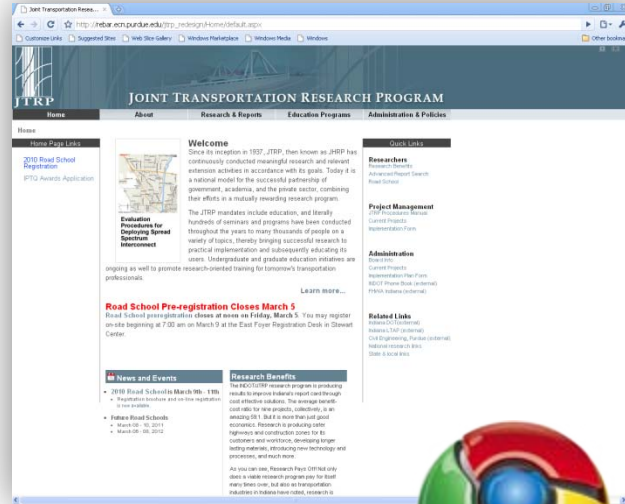

Web Browsers

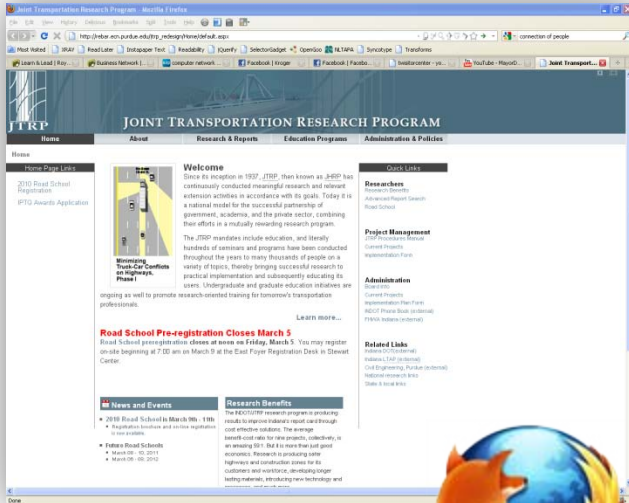

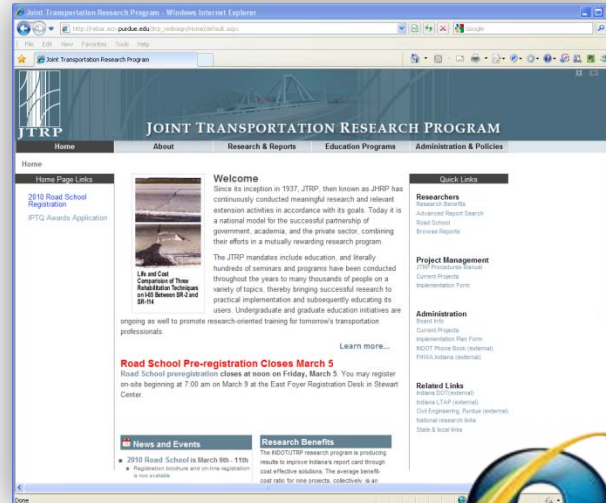

Apple Safari

Google Chrome

Firefox 3

Internet Explorer 8

Internet Explorer 6

BUT WITHOUT A
STRONG COMPETITOR,
MICROSOFT LEFT ITS BROWSER STAGNANT.

THOUGH THE WEB

...THE BROWSER MOST PEOPLE USED TO VIEW IT
DID NOT.

Microsoft recommends that you stop using IE 6.

Upgrade for free to IE 8 or any of these other browsers.

What Version of IE are You Using?

- Open Internet Explorer by clicking the Start button , and then clicking Internet Explorer.
- Press ALT+H, and then click About Internet Explorer.

The page title is "Your Neighborhood's Small Businesses" and it is part of a discussion board for the City of Boston. The post is from the "City of Boston (Official)" page, dated February 10, 2009. The post text discusses the importance of small businesses in communities, their role in economic development, and the challenges they face during an economic downturn. It also includes a recommendation for a local eatery, Blas's Cafe/The Fat Belly Deli.

City of Boston (Official) Your Neighborhood Small Business

Small businesses often serve as stabilizing anchors within our communities. Many of them have been in their host communities for years, adjusting their business model to community needs, investing in the local neighborhood and sharing their resources.

They can be counted on to donate hot dogs for the neighborhood block party or to be a couple of doors away in the fiercest snow storm. Whether bodegas, "moms and pops" or favorite restaurants, they revitalize our commercial districts, providing facelifts for whole neighborhoods.

In addition to the conveniences that they bring to our lives, small businesses have brought major economic improvements to Boston's neighborhoods. There are now 19 neighborhood business districts operating within the Boston Main Streets Program. A public-private initiative first established in 1995 by Mayor Menino to revitalize neighborhood commercial districts, the program has generated 676 net new and expanded businesses, created 4,382 net new jobs, assisted in 641 storefront improvement projects, and given design assistance to 781 businesses. What's more, Boston Main Streets had dispensed more than $1.9 million in total physical improvement grants which had leveraged more than $10.5 million in private investment, a leverage ratio of 5.5 to 1.

Unfortunately, many of these smaller enterprises are going out of business in this economic downturn -- at times because they do not have the resources to market themselves so that more people know about their services. Use this forum to do some of that viral marketing for your favorite local small business. Spread the word about a little-known business offering a great service in your neighborhood with your fellow Bostonians.

Anthony Crowe There are lots of great places to eat around the city that are small businesses in some sense - they could be locally owned, single location, or even family businesses. Or they could encompass several of these traits. Here are some of my favorites:

* Blas's Cafe/The Fat Belly Deli (Dorchester)
This is my default place to eat no matter where I am. The sandwiches are enormous and made from high-quality deli cuts. The staff are locals and largely friendly, and the owners are extremely personable. They have a lengthy menu that highlights a lot of italian favorites even though they're situated in a historically irish neighborhood. Their tomato sauce is among the best I've ever

U.S. Geological Survey: Twitter Earthquake Detector (TED)

The U.S. Geological Survey is using funds from the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act to support a student who's investigating social Internet technologies as a way to quickly gather information about recent earthquakes.

In this exploratory effort, the USGS is developing a system that gathers real-time, earthquake-related messages from the social networking site Twitter and applies place, time, and key word filtering to gather geo-located accounts of shaking. This approach provides rapid first-impression narratives and, potentially, photos from people at the hazard's location. The potential for earthquake detection in populated but sparsely seismically-instrumented regions is also being investigated.

Social Internet technologies are providing the general public with anecdotal earthquake hazard information before scientific information has been published from authoritative sources. People local to an event are able to publish information via these technologies within seconds of their occurrence. In contrast, depending on the location of the earthquake, scientific alerts can take between 2 to 20 minutes. By adopting and embracing these new technologies, the USGS potentially can augment its earthquake response products and the delivery of hazard information.

For more information on this project, please e-mail USGSted@usgs.gov or follow @USGSted on Twitter. Read more information about the USGS Earthquake Program.

@Jeremypwhite This 'x' indicates a double sharp. So instead of a f sharp it's a f sharp sharp (so basically a g).
