tuggers out of little remaining hair, leapers from 77th story building windows, and others, but this, i would wager there isn't a single one of us in the human race that is a non-person. i would further wager that there isn't a single one of us in the human race that is a non-hero.

fourth grade

billy lived in a house on the corner. he had a pretty mother. but no friends.

every day at lunchtime, billy would ride his bicycle right up to the edge of the oily dirt playground with a big cyclone fence carrying a big bag of all kinds of candy bars that he had bought with money stolen from his pretty mother, and scream, "come and get them," illy lived in use on corner. he had a retty other. but nds.

flinging the candy bars over the iron barrier and into the oily dirt; ballgames would stop all of a sudden as they saw him coming on his bike and went racing towards the edge of the playground, and grappled.

ly in se on rner. had other. but no s.

responsibility occurrence

"i will wait & see," he mumbles/

while at the same time pyramids crumble at ghiza

a surgeon's hands wither to pinecones

a taxi driver smashes into a steel girder on the golden gate bridge avalanche buries two mountain goats in love.

-- David L. Wann
Indian Hills CO

ambition

he took a quick look at the world around him, and clawed his way to the bottom.

common humanity

"How would you like your pecularities cooked today?" the lunch counterman asked.

She sighed to herself. "Very rare, please," she said aloud, knowing full well that the Cook would never permit her or anyone else to have them that way. In his pot everything became much alike.

taking thought

Miriam had the theory all her life that if she gave up smoking in her old age her eyesight would improve — when she reduced she would look pretty and ten years younger — when she began to exercise, she would add those ten years to her life time — when she put her mind to it, she would stand tall with no stoop.

So she never bothered to do any of those things and died with her theory intact.

-- Beverly Lancaster

New York NY