

ADULT EDUCATION

Gone is the stack of Playboy, Playboy substitutes, assorted nudes.

Philpot is determined to break the habit: unlike the ex-smoker, he's on his own. He looks back on a time before he was addicted, and can't remember it. He's been adult all his life yet his pleasures, they tell him, are those of a child. He has vowed reform so often, his friends dismiss him as a comic turn. But this time he's determined to take the "You're never too old to learn" joke seriously.

Surreptitiously, Philpot opens his first textbook in forty years, defying Maureen and regretting the two or three kind women not eligible for the class.

"What do you say after you say Hello?" the book asks, on the front page; but there are no pictures, and the new student will have to read through 200 pages to find out.
