

BURIAL AT SEA

(For Captain Karl-Heinz Buzke and his 11-ton motor yacht, 'Chicken,' who bury the remains of rich Germans on the Baltic holiday coast of Travemuende.)

Like a rich German bored with his villa in the South of France; like a rich German,

Philpot has decided to be buried at sea.
He would like his 'Chicken' to be the Royal Yacht Britannia or the QE2 packed with explosives -- unless Concorde could be pressed into service with a laser-guided parachute.

His Travemuende could be anywhere off the British Isles (except oil-polluted Scotland) with small-island fishermen in attendance to bring back the flavour of home.

He has canvassed the West Indian Literary community for a burial poem; and has arranged a party to audition the delegates.

The poets, back from America, from Africa, from Europe, are still mopping-up pockets of English-language counter-resistance. So he's decided to be tactful, and not die to catch them unprepared. He will await the call from his German villa in the South of France.
