

Journal of the Indiana Academy of the Social Sciences

Volume 14 | Issue 1

Article 17

2010

Author Biographical Notes

JIASS Staff

Follow this and additional works at: <http://digitalcommons.butler.edu/jiass>

Part of the Social and Behavioral Sciences Commons

Recommended Citation

Staff, JIASS (2010) "Author Biographical Notes," Journal of the Indiana Academy of the Social Sciences: Vol. 14 : Iss. 1 , Article 17.
Available at: <http://digitalcommons.butler.edu/jiass/vol14/iss1/17>

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by Digital Commons @ Butler University. It has been accepted for inclusion in Journal of the Indiana Academy of the Social Sciences by an authorized editor of Digital Commons @ Butler University. For more information, please contact fgaede@butler.edu.

AUTHORS' BIOGRAPHICAL NOTES

Fernando Paulo Baptista is a native of the District of Viseu, Portugal. Dr. Fernando Paulo Baptista was educated in classical philology at the University of Coimbra and has served in several capacities, such as Inspector of the Ministry of Education, during which time he audited various higher education programs. As a researcher and professor, he also developed an intense intellectual and academic activity in association with the Piaget Institute in Viseu, where, among other functions, he directed the Center for the Investigation of the Portuguese Language (CILP) and specifically the research aimed at the elaboration of dictionaries and specialized manuals. He is the author of several philosophical, epistemological, and philological papers and books, including Tributo à Madre Língua, 2003; Polifonia, Poiese & Antropopoiese—Para uma Sinfónica do Humano, 2005; A Rede Lexical do “Imaginário”—Clave para uma leitura deste conceito, 2007; and Nesta nossa doce língua de Camões e de Aquilino, 2010. Dr. Baptista is an honorary member of the International Movement Toward Telehealth and Telemedicine and an honorary member of the Jury of VIDEOMED (International Competition of Medical, Health and Telemedicine Cinema), and he has served as editorial reviewer to the “Bulletin” of the World Health Organization (WHO).

Matthew Todd Bradley is an associate professor of political science in the History/Political Science Department at Indiana University Kokomo. Dr. Bradley’s specialization is in the area of comparative politics/international relations. More specifically, he investigates civil society actors (including nongovernmental organizations), democratization in “developing” countries, and the effect of such variables as ethnicity and religion.

Russell Coulter-Kern is an associate professor of psychology at Manchester College. He has research interests in service-learning and community-based learning.

James B. Dworkin is currently Chancellor, Purdue University North Central. Dr. Dworkin came to the Purdue University North Central (PNC) campus in January of 2000 from the Purdue University West Lafayette campus. Prior to coming to PNC, Dr. Dworkin served as associate dean of the School of Management and the Krannert Graduate School of Management on the West Lafayette campus. Chancellor Dworkin has been with Purdue since 1976. He received his BA in economics (with high honors) and MA in industrial relations from the University of Cincinnati and his PhD in industrial relations from the University of Minnesota. Dr. Dworkin has an extensive publishing record in the area of labor relations and continues to serve as a labor arbitrator and fact-finder. He has earned membership in the National Academy of Arbitrators. The chancellor is a member of several boards in the community, including the Lubeznik Center for the Arts, United Way of Porter County, Horizon Bank, and the LaPorte Regional Health System. Dr. Dworkin was the featured keynote speaker at the Annual Meeting of the Indiana Academy of the Social Sciences held in Indianapolis in October 2010.

Kelly Fogle graduated with a BA in psychology from Manchester College in May 2011. She will begin a master’s program in clinical psychology later this year.

Peter Z. Grossman is currently the Clarence Efroymson Professor of Economics at Butler University, Indianapolis, Indiana, a position he has held since 1994. Dr. Grossman is the author or editor of six books and more than 150 articles. He received his PhD in economics from Washington University, where he was a student of Nobel laureate Douglass C. North.

Kelly Hacker Jones completed an MA in history at Ball State University in 2008. Currently, she holds the position of adjunct professor in the department of Liberal Arts and Sciences at Ivy Tech Community College-Indianapolis and is also a docent at the Indiana Medical History Museum. Her research interests include public health and politics in Progressive Era United States and Great Britain.

Hisaya Kitaoka is currently assistant professor of economics in the Economics, Business and Accounting Department at Franklin College, Indiana. Dr. Kitaoka was born and raised in Tokyo, Japan. After he earned his BA from Keio University in Tokyo, he started working for the Mitsubishi Corporation, the largest and leading Japanese international business company. He was involved in the oil and gas business. After 20 years with Mitsubishi Corporation, Dr. Kitaoka came to the United States to study economics. He earned his MA and his PhD in economics in 2005 and 2008, respectively, from the University of Kansas. His research interests include microeconomics, international trade, applied microeconomics, and economics education.

Robert S. Main is currently professor of Economics at Butler University, where he has taught since 1981. Previously, he was on the faculty at California State University, Hayward. He has held visiting positions at Strathclyde University in Scotland and Lingnan University in Hong Kong. He received his PhD in economics from UCLA. He is the coauthor of a principles of economics textbook and of articles in the field of environmental economics.

Christopher D. Mercado is a graduate of Indiana University Northwest (2009) and has recently earned his MA Politics degree from the Queen's University of Belfast in Northern Ireland. His research focuses primarily on U.S. foreign policy, Latin American and Balkan politics, and philosophical issues with practical applications. His current research is a comparative study of the American and Irish Revolutions.

M. Solaiman Miah will begin a new position in autumn 2011 as an instructor at McNeese State University Department of Accounting, Finance, and Economics, Lake Charles, Louisiana. Dr. Miah has recently been a visiting assistant professor in finance and economics at Purdue University, Calumet, and before that an assistant professor of economics at West Virginia State University. He earned his PhD in economics at Northern Illinois University, his MS from the University of Kentucky, and his BA from Eastern Illinois University.

Theo Randall is an assistant professor of anthropology in the Department of Sociology and Anthropology at Indiana University South Bend. Theo is a medical anthropologist with research interests in medical pluralism, malaria, traditional African religion, reproductive health, and chemical dependency. He specializes in the peoples and cultures of the Senegambia Region of West Africa, Nigeria, Ethiopia, and the United States, particularly African Americans.

Dulce Maria Scott holds a PhD in sociology from Brown University. She is a full professor at Anderson University in Indiana and an affiliated researcher with the Institute for Portuguese and Lusophone World Studies at Rhode Island College. She is also a research consultant to the Portuguese American Leadership Council of the United States (PALCUS). One of her areas of academic specialization is immigration, ethnicity, and race in America. Recently, she has conducted research on Latino-owned businesses in central Indiana and on immigrant women to the state of Indiana from all over the world. Lately, she has concentrated her efforts on the experience of integration of Luso-descendants in America. She has published several papers related to these areas of study and has made numerous presentations at various conferences and colloquia in the United States and Portugal. She is a member of the Board of Directors of the Indiana Academy of the Social Sciences and is an associate editor of the academic journal published by the Academy.

Harrison Sibert is a junior psychology major at Manchester College. He plans to study industrial-organizational psychology in the future.

Sarah R. Simpson graduated from Butler University with high honors in December 2010 and earned the Emile Durkheim award. Her current research interests include hot-spot policing, community policing, and problem-oriented policing.

Michael R. Szymanski. After attending school at Indiana State University from 2000 through 2003, Michael decided it was the right time to return to school in the fall of 2009 and enrolled at Indiana University, South Bend, to complete his degree. Since returning to school, he has been in the honors program and has made the dean's list every semester. Michael's major is history, with a political science minor. He plans to pursue graduate studies in modern American history, with a focus on the Cold War and its effects on current events. The majority of Michael's research centers around 9/11 and what we, as historians, can do to prevent a future tragedy of this magnitude in the future.

Diane E. Wille is professor of psychology at the School of Social Sciences, IU Southeast. Dr. Wille's research program includes a longitudinal study on the socio-emotional development of children from infancy to adolescence and family dynamics specifically focusing on children's interactions with both mothers and fathers.