I. INTRODUCTION

Florida has long been a hotbed of baseball activity.¹ Today, the state is home to two Major League Baseball (“MLB”) teams, fourteen minor league teams, fifteen spring training sites, both of the schools that train future big league umpires, and numerous amateur and youth teams.² As a result, its case reporters are filled with baseball opinions that stretch back more than a century.³ Collectively, these judgments chronicle the significant role that Florida's bench and bar have played in the development of America's national pastime. To make these decisions more accessible, they are briefly summarized below.

II. ANTITRUST LAW

In 1922, the Supreme Court of the United States granted MLB immunity from the nation's antitrust laws.⁴ The Eleventh Circuit has applied this ruling twice—first in a case involving the scheduling of minor league baseball games,⁵ and then in a case investigating the proposed elimination of the Minnesota Twins and Montreal Expos.⁶ In contrast, the Supreme Court of Florida has read the exemption as applying only to player contracts.⁷ Accordingly, the Second District reinstated a lawsuit in which the plaintiffs claimed that numerous parties had conspired to keep them from buying the Minnesota Twins and moving them to Florida.⁸

III. BANKRUPTCY LAW

Two cases from the Middle District have examined baseball through the prism of the country's bankruptcy laws.⁹ In the former, a group of creditors objected to the debtor's proposal to sell his interest in the Fort Wayne Wizards and use the proceeds to pay his attorneys.¹⁰ In affirming the bankruptcy court, the district court found the debtor's plan to be a reasonable one.¹¹

In the latter, the owners of two fantasy baseball camps sold their businesses.¹² Despite a non-competition agreement, they soon opened several new camps.¹³ After the purchasers obtained a $241,000 judgment from a Texas state court, the sellers filed for bankruptcy in Florida and sought to discharge the judgment.¹⁴ Agreeing with the purchasers, the bankruptcy court held the sellers could only discharge so much of the judgment as was not attributable to their willful misconduct.¹⁵

IV. CIVIL RIGHTS LAW

In a pro se complaint, a federal prisoner claimed the Tampa Bay Devil Rays were plotting to kill him when he got out of jail.¹⁶ Finding this allegation to be delusional, the Middle District dismissed the case.¹⁷

V. CONTRACT LAW

In 1949, the City of Miami opened Miami Stadium and hired Florida Sportservice, Inc. ("Sportservice") to run the concession stands.¹⁸ For the next five years, the Miami Sun Sox, a Brooklyn Dodgers farm team, called the field home.¹⁹ In 1954, however, the Sun Sox folded.²⁰ Following two seasons without baseball, Sidney Salomon, Jr., Sportservice's owner, purchased the Syracuse Chiefs and moved the team to Florida, where they became the original Miami Marlins.²¹

After having the Marlins sign a one-sided concession agreement with Sportservice, Salomon sold the club to media mogul George B. Storer.²²

When Storer found out about the sweetheart deal, he moved to set it aside.²³ The trial court dismissed his complaint but the Third District reversed.²⁴

A short time later, the City of Miami informed Sportservice it had decided not to renew its contract.²⁵ Sportservice responded by suing the City, arguing that the absence of baseball from 1954 to 1956 entitled it to a two-year extension.²⁶ The Third District rejected this contention because other events had taken place at Miami Stadium at which Sportservice had been able to sell concessions.²⁷

Several contract cases have involved the current Miami Marlins. When the engineering company building the team's spring training complex was fired, for example, it sued Brevard County to recover the cost of various change orders.²⁸ Because the orders were issued orally rather than in writing, the Supreme Court of Florida found collection on them barred by sovereign immunity.²⁹

In 1997, the Marlins delighted their fans by winning their first World Series; as a result, CFI Sales & Marketing, Ltd. ("CFI") purchased premium stadium seats and advertising for the 1998 season.³⁰ When the club then held a fire sale and wound up finishing in last place, CFI, believing it had been duped, sued for a refund but lost.³¹ On appeal, the Third District affirmed.³²

At a 2008 charity auction, Marlins president David Samson jokingly announced he was putting the team up for bid.³³ The Pomeranz & Landsman Corporation ("P & L") immediately offered $10 million.³⁴ When the Marlins refused to go through with the "sale," P & L sued.³⁵ After P & L dropped its lawsuit, the Marlins moved for attorneys' fees.³⁶ In issuing a prohibitory writ, the Fourth District explained the trial court had lost its power to impose sanctions when the case was dismissed.³⁷

In an action involving considerably less drama, the City of Winter Haven filed a three-count complaint against the Cleveland Indians over the team's failure to pay the City for using its Chain-O-Lakes baseball complex.³⁸ Agreeing with the Indians, the Middle District held the first count (breach of contract) necessitated dismissal of the second and third counts (open account and account stated).³⁹

Two contract cases have involved baseball memorabilia.⁴⁰ In one of them, the plaintiff accused an out-of-state defendant of selling him a fake Joe DiMaggio jersey.⁴¹ The defendant moved to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction, but the Southern District found the defendant had sufficient contacts with Florida.⁴²

In the other case, the plaintiff claimed the defendants had issued a grossly inflated appraisal for a "Hall of Fame Baseball Montage."⁴³ The trial court dismissed for failure to state a claim, but the Fourth District reversed.⁴⁴

VI. CRIMINAL LAW

Florida's two earliest reported baseball decisions arose from the state's 1905 ban on Sunday baseball.⁴⁵ In the first, the Supreme Court of Florida upheld the newly-enacted law against multiple constitutional attacks.⁴⁶ In the second, it set the defendant free after finding that the complainant, a minister, lacked standing.⁴⁷

In a more typical criminal case, a con man created a fictitious baseball team (the Gainesville All Stars) and convinced a local jeweler to be its sponsor.⁴⁸ A jury convicted him of forgery for cashing the jeweler's check.⁴⁹ On appeal, the Supreme Court of Florida affirmed.⁵⁰

In a somewhat similar scheme, Vincent Antonucci, the owner of a Crystal River souvenir shop called Talkin' Baseball, swindled Ted Williams, the legendary Boston Red Sox left fielder and the business's silent partner.⁵¹ When the State of Florida and Williams both went after Antonucci, the trial judge continued the State's criminal case to allow Williams' civil case to finish first.⁵² On appeal, the Fifth District found this to be error.⁵³

In another case involving a famous major leaguer, former Detroit Tigers pitcher Denny McLain had his federal racketeering conviction overturned by the Eleventh Circuit because the actions of the prosecutor and the trial judge had denied him a fair trial.⁵⁴

More recently, a woman convinced a bank that two World Series baseballs—one signed by the New York Yankees and the other by the Detroit Tigers—were worth $8 million.⁵⁵ The jury found her guilty of bank fraud, but the Northern District threw out the verdict for lack of evidence.⁵⁶ On appeal, the Eleventh Circuit ordered it reinstated.⁵⁷

In two separate incidents, a New York Mets minor league player and a little league coach were convicted of sexual misconduct.⁵⁸ The Fourth District upheld the player's conviction,⁵⁹ but the First District reversed the coach's conviction because the prosecutors had relied on an improper theory.⁶⁰

In yet another case, an off-duty police officer at a St. Lucie Mets game had too much to drink.⁶¹ When he was asked to leave, he became hostile and was taken into custody.⁶² Following his release, he sued for false arrest and false imprisonment, but the Southern District dismissed his complaint.⁶³

VII. DISABILITY LAW

There are two reported cases involving disabled baseball fans.⁶⁴ In the first, the plaintiff sought to force the Florida Marlins to make Pro Player Stadium more accessible.⁶⁵ The Southern District dismissed because the plaintiff's proposed modifications were not readily achievable.⁶⁶

In the second, involving similar claims against the St. Lucie Mets at Tradition Field, the Southern District put off ruling on the team's motions to dismiss for lack of standing and mootness until a full record could be developed.⁶⁷

VIII. EDUCATION LAW

The baseball coach at Coconut Creek High School was disciplined for failing to prevent hazing during a team trip to Orlando.⁶⁸ On appeal, the Fourth District reversed the Broward County School Board's decision because the coach had been unaware of the players' activities.⁶⁹

denied a hardship waiver had his case dismissed by the trial court.⁷¹ On appeal, the Third District reversed and held he was entitled to a hearing.⁷²

In the second, four home-schooled players sued after school officials declared them ineligible to play for the Chattahoochee High Magnet School baseball team.⁷³ Finding that no rules had been broken, the trial court ordered them reinstated.⁷⁴

In the third, a catcher at All Saints Academy in Winter Haven petitioned for an extra year of eligibility.⁷⁵ The trial court granted his request, but the Second District reversed after concluding the record did not support such an extraordinary remedy.⁷⁶

In the fourth, a Nova High School player argued that his team's regional semi-final game against St. Thomas High School should not have been called due to rain.⁷⁷ The trial court dismissed the lawsuit for lack of standing, failure to exhaust administrative remedies, and failure to state a cause of action.⁷⁸ It also found that the umpires had been right to give the victory to St. Thomas.⁷⁹

IX. FAMILY LAW

Just before going on a team trip, Boston Red Sox pitching coach Dennis Rasmussen signed a note leaving all of his property to his wife Jan "in the event of death or separation."⁸⁰ The couple later divorced.⁸¹ Relying on the note, the trial court ruled that Rasmussen's individual retirement account and MLB pension were marital assets.⁸² The Second District reversed because the note, being conditional, failed to create a valid gift.⁸³

X. GAMBLING LAW

Three cases have involved prosecutions for wagering on baseball.⁸⁴ In the first, the Southern District ordered cash seized from a bookmaker who had taken bets on baseball to be returned.⁸⁵ On appeal, the Fifth Circuit ordered a new trial.⁸⁶

In the second, the defendants “were found guilty of maintaining a gambling room.”⁸⁷ On appeal, the Third District reversed because the evidence—a bet on one baseball game—was insufficient to support the charges.⁸⁸

In the third, the defendants were convicted by the Southern District of taking bets on baseball games.⁸⁹ Finding no error, the Fifth Circuit affirmed their sentences.⁹⁰

XI. GENDER DISCRIMINATION LAW

Claiming she had been denied a promotion because of her gender, a woman baseball umpire sued multiple defendants.⁹¹ When she failed to make timely service, two of the defendants moved for dismissal, which the Middle District granted.⁹²

In two different lawsuits against the Brevard County School Board, the Middle District found that the disparities between the boys’ baseball and girls’ softball programs at various local high schools were so substantial they violated federal and state law.⁹³

XII. IMMIGRATION LAW

After successfully smuggling Cuban infielder Yuniesky Betancourt into the United States and obtaining a $2.8 million contract for him with the Seattle Mariners, sports agent Gustavo Dominguez decided to try his luck again with five more Cuban players.⁹⁴ This time the plan blew up and Dominguez was convicted by the Southern District of smuggling, concealing, and transporting unlawful aliens.⁹⁵ On appeal, the Eleventh Circuit affirmed the smuggling conviction but reversed the other charges for lack of evidence.⁹⁶

XIII. INSURANCE LAW

Following the closure of a baseball card store, one of its investors agreed to keep its inventory in his home.⁹⁷ A short time later, the home was broken into, and the cards were stolen.⁹⁸ The investor sued his insurer and was awarded $25,000.⁹⁹ Considering this amount to be too little, the investor filed a new action against his agent for failing to provide him with the proper coverage.¹⁰⁰

In the trial court and at the Fourth District, the agent successfully defended on the ground that the investor's suit was time-barred.¹⁰¹ On appeal, the Supreme Court of Florida rejected this contention.¹⁰² Nevertheless, it ordered the complaint dismissed due to the investor's bad faith in suing the agent.¹⁰³

A little league coach injured during a game sued both the league and the City of South Daytona.¹⁰⁴ Nutmeg, the City's insurer, tendered the case to Continental, the league's insurer, but it denied liability.¹⁰⁵ After the coach's claim was dismissed, the City filed a declaratory judgment action against Continental for attorneys' fees.¹⁰⁶ The trial court ordered Continental to reimburse the City for both actions.¹⁰⁷ On appeal, the Fifth District held the City was entitled to attorneys' fees only in the coach's action.¹⁰⁸

When pitcher Alex Fernandez re-injured his shoulder, the Florida Marlins sought reimbursement from its insurer Lloyd's of London.¹⁰⁹ Having paid out on a previous claim, Lloyd's denied coverage.¹¹⁰ During discovery, it sought to learn what the Marlins had been told by a Missouri lawyer named Michael Whittle.¹¹¹ The Marlins objected, claiming that Whittle's advice was protected by attorney-client privilege.¹¹² The trial court rejected this contention because Whittle was not admitted in Florida, but the Third District reversed.¹¹³

After prospect Matthew White tore his rotator cuff while pitching for the 2000 U.S. Olympic team, the Tampa Bay Devil Rays submitted a claim to the Standard Security Life Insurance Company.¹¹⁴ It refused to pay because White was able to pitch sporadically during the 2001 season for the Durham Bulls.¹¹⁵ Finding that numerous unresolved fact issues existed, the Middle District denied Standard's summary judgment motion and referred the Devil Rays' summary judgment motion to a magistrate judge.¹¹⁶

XIV. INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY LAW

In two different actions, Little League Baseball, Inc. sued parties who were using its trademarks.¹¹⁷ In the first, the Middle District ordered the defendant to stop using the marks.¹¹⁸ In the second, the Southern District refused to let the defendant depose the league's president after finding he had

In another case, a songwriter who wrote a ballad about the Fort Myers Miracle sued the team for playing it at its home games.¹²⁰ When the Miracle produced proof it had twice obtained permission to do so, the Middle District granted the team summary judgment.¹²¹ On appeal, the Eleventh Circuit affirmed.¹²²

In a different action, a developer accused various parties of stealing his idea of having a baseball stadium anchor a mixed-used development project in Jupiter.¹²³ Finding the concept to be an obvious one, the trial court dismissed,¹²⁴ and the Fourth District affirmed.¹²⁵

In two cases, former MLB players sued others for using their names.¹²⁶ In the first, the Southern District dismissed for lack of personal jurisdiction a lawsuit filed by the estate of Joe DiMaggio against various San Francisco officials who had named a park in his honor.¹²⁷ In the second, the Fourth District decided the jury hearing Cecil Fielder's lawsuit against an interior decorating company had been unduly influenced by Fielder's fame.¹²⁸

XV. INTERNATIONAL LAW

After escaping Cuba and signing a $30 million contract with the Cincinnati Reds, pitcher Aroldis Chapman found himself sued by four individuals who claimed they had been tortured by the Cuban government after Chapman gave false testimony against them to avoid losing his spot on the Cuban national baseball team.¹²⁹ Citing the Act of State and political question doctrines, Chapman moved to dismiss the suit, but the Southern District found neither defense to be a bar.¹³⁰

XVI. JUDICIAL ETHICS

Broward Circuit Judge John T. Luzzo accepted Florida Marlins tickets from lawyers who regularly appeared in front of him.¹³¹ For this lapse in judgment, the Judicial Qualifications Commission recommended a public reprimand, which the Supreme Court of Florida imposed.¹³²

XVII. LABOR AND EMPLOYMENT LAW

When he was denied overtime, a Sarasota White Sox groundskeeper sued the team.¹³³ Based on the Fair Labor Standards Act's "recreational operator" exemption,¹³⁴ the Middle District dismissed.¹³⁵ On appeal, the Eleventh Circuit affirmed.¹³⁶

In another FLSA case, workers who had helped build the Miami Marlins' new stadium sued for wages they claimed they had not received.¹³⁷ The Southern District dismissed for lack of subject matter jurisdiction,¹³⁸ but the Eleventh Circuit reversed.¹³⁹

After officiating a game together at Spoto High School in Riverview, one umpire filed a report accusing the other umpire of inappropriate conduct.¹⁴⁰ The Umpires Association refused to give the second umpire a copy of the report but remained willing to hire him for future games.¹⁴¹ Indignant, the second umpire refused to accept any new assignments and sued the association for embarrassment and loss of income.¹⁴² Finding the plaintiff's claims to be meritless, the Hillsborough Circuit Court dismissed them.¹⁴³

XVIII. LIBEL LAW

In an interview in the Ladies Home Journal, Kelly Ripken, the wife of Baltimore Orioles shortstop Cal Ripken, implied that a particular woman was a baseball groupie who wanted to sleep with her husband.¹⁴⁷ Taking offense, the woman sued, but the trial court dismissed.¹⁴⁸ On appeal, the Fourth District affirmed because the comment was "pure opinion."¹⁴⁹

XIX. MEDICAL MALPRACTICE LAW

A student at Braulio Alonso High School in Tampa died from cardiac arrest during a pre-season baseball workout.¹⁵⁰ The jury found that the doctor who had signed the student's medical release form was 20% liable.¹⁵¹ On appeal, the Second District reversed because the student's estate failed to establish that the doctor's actions were a proximate cause of death.¹⁵²

When it appeared that Orlando might get an MLB expansion team, Orange County pledged to build a new stadium using a 1% tourist tax.¹⁵⁵ In response, a group of hotels filed a lawsuit.¹⁵⁶ The trial court dismissed their action as premature, but the Fifth District reversed.¹⁵⁷ The matter became moot after the franchise was awarded to Tampa Bay.¹⁵⁸

A decade later, the City of Miami agreed to build a new stadium for the Florida Marlins.¹⁵⁹ Two taxpayers sought but were denied a temporary injunction prohibiting the City from selling the bonds needed to pay for the project.¹⁶⁰ In dismissing their appeal as moot, the Third District pointed out that their failure to request an emergency stay had resulted in the bonds being issued.¹⁶¹

XXI. OPEN GOVERNMENT LAW

In a case involving St. Petersburg's failure to land the Chicago White Sox as a tenant for its new stadium, the Second District ordered the City to share its records with the public.¹⁶² But in a subsequent case involving the relocation of the Baltimore Orioles' spring training home from Fort Lauderdale to Sarasota, the Supreme Court of Florida decided that Sarasota had not violated any laws by conducting negotiations in private.¹⁶³

XXII. PERSONAL INJURY LAW

In an early case, a Pensacola boy chasing a baseball was seriously injured when he ran into the street and was hit by a car.¹⁶⁴ The jury found for the youngster, but the Supreme Court of Florida reversed due to his contributory negligence.¹⁶⁵ In a much more recent case, the Middle District held that a van carrying a baseball team was not responsible for a bicyclist's injuries.¹⁶⁶

In most of Florida's personal injury baseball cases, the plaintiff either has been a spectator or a bystander.¹⁶⁷ Sometimes, however, the plaintiff has been a player. For example, when a batter was injured because the helmet he was wearing failed to protect him, he sued its out-of-state manufacturer.¹⁶⁸ Although the trial court twice found the defendant amenable to suit in Florida, the First District reversed both times.¹⁶⁹

Three player cases have involved pitching machines.¹⁷⁰ In the first, two friends were sharing a batting cage.¹⁷¹ While taking a swing at a pitch, one of the friends accidentally hit the other with his bat.¹⁷² The injured friend later sued the facility's operator, claiming he should have warned patrons that it was dangerous for two players to be in the cage at the same time.¹⁷³ The trial court agreed, but the Second District reversed.¹⁷⁴

In the second, a child was injured when a pitching machine's arm unexpectedly struck him.¹⁷⁵ After his parents sued the machine's manufacturer and its distributors, they were counter-sued for contribution.¹⁷⁶ Finding that the child had released his parents from liability, the Third District affirmed the dismissal of the counter-suit.¹⁷⁷

In the third, a batter was injured when a pitching machine malfunctioned.¹⁷⁸ After jury selection, one of the defendants settled the case for $1.1 million.¹⁷⁹ It then sought contribution from the other defendants.¹⁸⁰ Two of the co-defendants refused to pay and claimed they had defenses that would have shielded them from any judgment.¹⁸¹ The trial court agreed with the co-defendants, but the First District reversed.¹⁸²

XXIII. REAL PROPERTY LAW

As part of its plan to build a new power station, the City of Jacksonville filed an eminent domain lawsuit to acquire thirty-six acres of privately-held land.¹⁸³ Contending that it did not need the entire parcel, the property's owner, as well as a baseball team with a subordinate interest,

In a different action to stop the City of Gulfport from leasing a portion of Tomlinson Park to a baseball league, the Second District found the proposed arrangement to be a valid public use.¹⁸⁶

When a law transferring Al Lopez Field—the spring training home of the Cincinnati Reds—from the City of Tampa to the Tampa Sports Authority was challenged, the Supreme Court of Florida upheld the statute as a proper exercise of the Florida Legislature’s municipal oversight powers.¹⁸⁷

In a similar action, a taxpayer sued the City of Fort Myers for failing to give proper notice of its plan to transfer City of Palms Park—the spring training home of the Boston Red Sox—to Lee County.¹⁸⁸ Finding that the plaintiff did not have standing, the Second District dismissed.¹⁸⁹

In yet another case, a group of North Bay Village homeowners sought to prevent the construction of a baseball field at Treasure Island Elementary School, claiming it would create a nuisance.¹⁹⁰ The Third District dismissed the complaint on sovereign immunity grounds.¹⁹¹

XXIV. TAX LAW

In 1948, a husband and wife won a car during a raffle at a Tampa Smokers baseball game.¹⁹² The IRS assessed income taxes, which the couple paid under protest.¹⁹³ In court, they argued that a sign at Plant Field had informed fans that a car would be given away, thereby making the vehicle a gift.¹⁹⁴ Agreeing with this contention, the Southern District ordered the government to issue a refund.¹⁹⁵

When the Hillsborough County Value Adjustment Board granted a tax break to the New York Yankees' spring training facility in Tampa, the Hillsborough County property appraiser challenged the decision.¹⁹⁶ The trial court dismissed the complaint for lack of standing.¹⁹⁷ On appeal, the Second District affirmed.¹⁹⁸ In later proceedings, the Supreme Court of Florida affirmed the Second District.¹⁹⁹

Because of a back-loaded contract, the New York Mets owed deferred compensation to outfielder Darryl Strawberry.²⁰⁰ When the team sought to make the first payment, both the IRS and Strawberry's former wife stepped forward.²⁰¹ Agreeing with the magistrate judge's recommendation, the Northern District found for the IRS as the first-in-time creditor.²⁰²

XXV. WORKERS' COMPENSATION LAW

Generally speaking, professional athletes are entitled to receive workers' compensation.²⁰³ Two Florida cases have authorized such benefits,²⁰⁴ and two others have rejected procedural attempts to block such claims.²⁰⁵

XXVI. CONCLUSION

As the foregoing makes clear, Florida's courts have been in the middle of almost every conceivable type of baseball-related dispute. What sorts of cases will they handle in the future? Although prognostications always are fraught with risk, it seems likely that actions involving injured fans will continue to be brought, especially if the nascent movement to jettison the venerable “Baseball Rule”—which protects stadium operators from liability for balls that leave the field and hit spectators—takes root in Florida.²⁰⁶

A number of lawsuits will arise if the Tampa Bay Rays decide to exercise their new-found right to depart Tropicana Field early.²⁰⁷ Indeed, it almost is a certainty that a group of wary taxpayers will challenge whatever funding mechanism is used to finance the project. Moreover, if the negotiations are not transparent, an open government lawsuit is practically a given. And, of course, at least some residents will seek to force the club to fully honor its existing lease.²⁰⁸

The minimum wage litigation taking place in California between minor league players and MLB has enormous potential ramifications for Florida. The players contend they are being grossly underpaid in violation of federal law.²⁰⁹ If they prevail, the continued financial viability of one or more of Florida’s minor league teams could be in jeopardy.

Just before the start of the 2015 season, MLB punished Miami Marlins pitcher Jarred Cosart after rumors spread that he had bet on baseball.²¹⁰ Nevertheless, MLB and the country’s three other major sports leagues are getting closer to dropping their longstanding opposition to sports gambling.²¹¹ This will have significant implications for Florida’s casinos, 206. The Baseball Rule was announced in Crane v. Kansas City Baseball & Exhibition Co. and quickly gained widespread acceptance. 153 S.W. 1076, 1077–78 (Mo. Ct. App. 1913). Four recent cases, however, have called it into question. See Coomer v. Kansas City Royals Baseball Corp., 437 S.W.3d 184, 197–98 (Mo. 2014) (en banc); *S. Shore Baseball, LLC v. App. 2014). Somewhat surprisingly, the Supreme Court of Florida has not had to construe the Baseball Rule.

President Obama's decision at the end of 2014 to normalize relations with Cuba will have important consequences for baseball in general and Florida in particular. Already, there is talk of holding spring training games in Cuba.²¹³ Many baseball fans—especially those in South Florida—will travel to such games, and it is not difficult to imagine some of these road trips ending in lawsuits if something goes wrong.

Lastly, baseball is seemingly a topic of conversation every time Florida's lawmakers meet. During its 2015 regular session, for example, the Florida Legislature helped advance construction of a joint-use facility for the Houston Astros and Washington Nationals in West Palm Beach by approving needed zoning changes.²¹⁴ It also considered bills relaxing the transfer rules for high school athletes,²¹⁵ imposing new restrictions on ticket resellers,²¹⁶ punishing disruptive youth sports coaches,²¹⁷ and requiring the state to regularly assess its efforts to retain MLB spring training sites.²¹⁸ Additionally, to mark the sixtieth anniversary of Roberto Clemente's big league debut, the Florida Senate passed a resolution honoring the Pittsburgh Pirates' Hall of Fame right fielder.²¹⁹

Of course, even if MLB greenlights gambling on its games, Florida's casinos will not be able to operate sports books until the Professional and Amateur Sports Protection Act of 1992, 28 U.S.C. §§ 3701-3704, either is repealed by Congress or struck down by the courts.
