Editors' Note

This international seminar on Language Maintenance and Shift II is a continuation of the previous international seminar with the same theme conducted by the Master Program in Linguistics, Diponegoro University in July 2011. We do hope that the seminar with this theme can become a yearly program of the Master Program in Linguistics, Diponegoro University, as we see that this topic still needs our serious attention due to the inevitable impact of globalization on the life of indigenous languages.

We would like to thank the seminar committee for putting together the seminar that gave rise to this collection of papers. Thanks also go to the head and secretary of the Master Program in Linguistics Diponegoro University, without whom the seminar would not have been possible.

The table of contents lists all the papers presented at the seminar. The first five papers are those presented by invited keynote speakers. They are Prof. Dr. Hanna (Balai Bahasa Provinsi Sulawesi Tenggara, Indonesia), Prof. Dr. Bambang Kaswanti Purwo (Atma Jaya Catholic University, Indonesia), Dr. Sugiyono (Language Center, Indonesia), Peter Suwarno, Ph.D (Arizona State University), and Herudjati Purwoko, Ph.D (Diponegoro University).

In terms of the topic areas, there are 33 papers on language maintenance, 24 papers on language learning, 19 paper on sociolinguistics, 15 paper on pragmatics, 8 papers on discourse analysis, 8 paper on morphology, 2 papers on syntax, 2 papers on translation, 1 papers on psycholinguistics, 1 papers on phonology, and 1 papers on semantics.

Abstract

The aim of this study is to explore the citation pattern in relation to tense choice for reporting past literature in the Introduction section of English research articles by non-native speakers. Since the research dealt with one type of papers, i.e. research articles, Genre Analysis was adopted. The results indicate that in terms of types, IPC (Information Prominent Citation) referring to general areas of research is much more dominant than APC (Author Prominent Citation) referring to specific areas whereas in the standard pattern the number of APC should be more dominant than IPC since IPC only functions as an "opening move" for reporting past literature. As IPC is more dominant than APC, the present tense also outnumbers the past tense.

INTRODUCTION

In a piece of scientific writing, citation especially by quoting from a book to support the argument is closely related to tense choice. For a novice writer, citing other people's work can be very difficult since he or she should decide which system or pattern to use and, in addition, which tenses to choose. The decision whether to put the author(s) at the beginning of the sentence or to put at the end of the sentence in brackets might result in confusion for the writer since such choices may affect the meaning contained in the sentence. A piece of writing can be classified as scientific when a number of citations are inserted throughout the paper, especially in the introduction, in the review of related literature, in the research methods, and the results and discussion. In general, the more citations in the article we have, the more comprehensive our article will be. In addition, the number and types of citations might also show the writer's credibility and depth concerning the topic under discussion. In this regard, Swales and Feak (1994: 252) argue that a text may sound "academic" or "popular" depending on the number and types of citation.

There are several terms for reviewing previous research. One may say Describing Previous Research or Reporting Past Literature (Oster, 1981), Reviewing Items of Previous Research (Swales and Feak, 1994: 251), Reference to Previous Research (Hopkins & Duddley-Evans (1988: 118). It is essentially an organized collection of references, or citations, to other works which are listed in a separate section at the end of our report (Weissberg & Buker, 1990 : 41).

In relation to reporting past literature or reviewing previous research Swales and Feak (1994 :254) propose different patterns for classifying citing statements: (1) the past tense is used when the researcher is an agent, (2) the present perfect is used when the researcher is not an agent, and (3) the present tense is used when there is no reference to researcher activity.

Reviewing Items of Previous Research is worth noting since it can show the knowledge depth in the chosen topic. According to Weissberg and Buker (1990:41), the review of literature (previous research) serves three important functions: background information, degree of familiarity with the chosen topic, and one link in a chain of research.

In reviewing the past literature, Weissberg and Buker (1990:43) further explain the importance of Citation Focus. The authors may have two options: (1) Information Prominent Citation (IPC) since the information is given primary importance; (2) Author Prominent Citation (APC). Information prominent citations are commonly used to signal the beginning of Stage II (Specific Information), where the citations refer to research in the general area of your study. This study aims at exploring the number and types of citation and tense choice for reporting past literature in the Introduction section of science journals by non-native speakers.

RESEARCH METHODS

In collecting the data the purposive random sampling was employed (Singarimbun and Effendi, 1989: 155). Twenty articles were chosen from five universities consisting of 4 papers from each university. Four papers here roughly represent the five majors in engineering (e.g. civil, mechanical, electrical, chemical, architecture, etc.) For ease of reference, we would refer to the papers as (e.g. papers I-UDP, V-UGM, IX-UI, XIII-ITB, XVII-ITS etc.) meaning it was written by UNDIP lecturers for UDP, and by UGM, UI, ITB, ITS lecturers.

RESULTS AND DISCUSSION

XX-ITS	Architecture	1 prg/6 sent	2	-	2
Sub-total			3	21
Total			26	93	119
Percentage			22%	78%	100%

Table 1 shows that in terms of frequency in the data (20 papers) the use of IPC is much more dominant than that of APC. The number of IPC and APC is 93 (78%) and 26 (22%) respectively from the total number of 119 citations. From the percentage it can roughly be interpreted that the citations are orientated to research in the general area, rather than in more specific areas which are closely related to the authors' own research. In reference to Weissberg and Buker (1990), the order of citations should begin with one IPC (as the beginning signal of Specific Information) which is then followed by several APCs. The tallying also shows a great difference of citation focus numbers; it ranges from 1 to 15 for each paper, even there is no citation at all in the Introduction section of VIII-UGM (Architecture).

Of the 20 papers only two papers (III-UDP, V-UGM) in the Introduction section, to some extent, conform to the Weissberg & Buker's pattern and the rest do not. In paper III-UDP the citation focus order is in line with what Weissberg & Buker propose, even though it is somewhat different from the proposed pattern. Instead of having one IPC, III-UDP paper contains two IPCs in the first paragraph; the first IPC is put in the first sentence and the second IPC in the fifth sentence. The following are two IPCs referring to research in the general area of the authors' study found in the first paragraph of the Introduction section (III-UDP):

1st IPC - "Currently, the research focuses more on the glassy polymers (Duval et al, 1993).

2nd IPC - "However, the investigation of polymer material such as polyimide for gas separation has been challenged by the upper bound trade off limitation between the productivity and the selectivity (Jiang et al, 2006)."

Borrowing Swales's term 'move', here the IPC (Information Prominent Citation) functions as a head move and as the literature review continues, it is then followed by several Author Prominent Citations (APC) which are more specific and more closely related to the authors' own study. The following are three APCs found in the second paragraph of the Introduction section (III-UDP)

1st APC - "Kulprathipanja and co workers observed that the O₂/N₂ selectivity increased from 3.0 to 4.3 when"

2nd APC - "According to Jia et al (1991), the incorporation of silicalite into silicone rubber (PDMS) membrane increased the O₂/N₂ selectivities from 2.14 to 2.92 in comparison to pure PDMS. "

3rd APC - "Duval et al (1993) studied carbon molecular sieve and zeolite such as silicalite-1, 13 X and KY as filler."

Table 2 Tense Choice in Reference to Previous Research

XIX-ITS	I	Chemical	3	2	1	1
XX-ITS	NI	Arch	-	2	-	-
Total			44	27	16	8

From the tallying (Table 2), in terms of tense choice number for reporting past literature the present tense is the most dominant (44), followed by pas tense (27), present perfect (16), and modality (8). Some writers only employed either present tense or past tense, only few writers combined three tenses (present tense, past tense, and present perfect) as proposed by Swales and Feak (1994). Even some writers used modality and one writer (VII-UGM) used present perfect continuous.

CONCLUSIONS

The results of analysis have revealed some problems in citation and tense choice for non-native speakers. According to Weissberg and Buker (1990) the order of citation should begin with one APC (as the beginning signal of specific information) which is then followed by several APCs. Of the 20 papers only a small number of the papers (2 papers) conform to the pattern and the rest do not. Such incompliance can be seen in the number and types of citation. In terms of types, IPC referring to general areas of research is much more dominant than APC referring to specific areas whereas in the proposed pattern the number of APC should be more dominant than IPC since IPC only functions as a head move (Swale, 1981) or as a beginning signal of specific information (Weissberg and Buker, 1990). The types of citation (IPC and APC) is correlated to the tense choice. Since IPC is more dominant than APC, the present tense also outnumbers the past tense (i.e. present tense: 44; past tense: 27; present perfect: 16). In terms of number, the citation focus ranges from 1 to 15 in each paper, even there is no citation at all in the Introduction section (VIII-UGM). According to Swales and Feak (1994) the presence or absence of citations may show whether a text is an "academic" or "popular" one. In addition, it may also indicate the knowledge depth of the writer; in other words, whether he or she is knowledgeable in his/her research topic.
