Abstract

In Indonesian, “kami” means ‘we’, which exclusively refers to the speaker and somebody else or other people but the addressee(s) or hearers. In English, to understand ‘we’ is not as simple as in ‘kami (exclusive ‘we’)’ and ‘kita (inclusive ‘we’)’ in Indonesian. The use of person deixes ‘kami’ and ‘kita’ refers to subjects taking actions or belongings. However, recently ‘kami’ is barely used by people and the trend of using inaccurate ‘kita’ is increasing. It is the same case as in utterances used by either radio broadcasters or other parties who are interacting with them. Thus, a research on personal deixis is needed particularly about the use of personal deixes. The aim of this research is to give a description about the use of person deixes ‘kami’ and ‘kita’ by radio broadcasters and the listeners. The description of the use of such deixes can be used as a benchmark to estimate the spoken language diversity that has been commonly used on each radio station. Besides, the description of it on radio stations can show that there are mistakes in the use of deixes in spoken language. By using an indirect observation method, the data are collected by recording in morning broadcasts on five different radio stations. The result shows that only few speakers - broadcasters, callers, and interviewees - use deixes ‘kami’ or ‘kita’ correctly. Deixis ‘kita’ is often used but mostly used inaccurately. On the other side, person deixis ‘kami’ is less used, and when speakers use this deixis, they use it accurately. However, ambiguities occur when ‘kami’ or ‘kita’ is used in certain contexts. The speakers of news-based radio broadcasts use the deixes properly. Meanwhile, young-listener-targeted radios frequently use deixis ‘kita’ incorrectly, except one radio, which is a state-owned radio.

Key words: person deixis, kami-kita, radio broadcasting

1. INTRODUCTION

The term ‘berbahasa Indonesia dengan baik’ (speaking Indonesian properly) has been gradually neglected. The word ‘properly’ alone is debatable. In addition to the politeness aspect, at least, the use of Indonesian that fits with every context it deals with surely is a necessity however. A study on language associated with the contexts falls within the realm of Pragmatics.

Levinson (1985:5) states that “...Pragmatics is the study of language usage”. Thus, language forms have functional perspective. A linguistic form with a certain linguistic structure is always associated with its context so that one can comprehend the real meaning of an utterance or writing.

To understand the meaning of either utterances or writings, there are some factors that need to pay attention, not only the meaning of each expression spoken but also the situation, speaker, and addressee (hearer) (Leech, 1993:8). Yule adds that, in Pragmatics, a meaning learned includes a meaning interpreted by someone within a particular context and how the context influences the meaning of his or her utterance. To interpret some utterance, one needs to pay attention to the pragmatic condition, which is what the speaker intend, what kind of motivation that triggers the meaning, as well as with who, when, and where he or she is speaking (Gunarwan, 2007:2).

In order to understand an utterance, there are many things to consider. Thus, in Pragmatics, several terms related to how the speaker addresses a speech act and how the addressee understand the meaning of what the speaker says need to be studied. Studies in Pragmatics include studies on deixes, reference-inference, speech acts, presupposition, and implicature. As for this study, the investigation deals with deixis.

Deixis

Yule (1996) uses the term ‘pointing via language’ to explain deixis. The language used for pointing is in form of a word, also called as deictic expression. Thus, deixis is a kind of reference meant by the speaker.

Generally, deixis is divided into three kinds, i.e. person, spatial, and temporal deixes. Person deixis indicates a person or persons using a certain word or term, e.g. ‘I’, ‘you’, and they. Spatial deixis indicates a place, e.g. ‘here’ and ‘there’. Temporal deixis indicates a certain time, e.g. ‘then’ and ‘now’ (Yule, 1996: 10-15). Meanwhile, this study analyses first-person-plural deixes in Indonesian, such as ‘kami’ and ‘kita’.

As for first-person deixis in Indonesian, it is divided into two types, such as first-person-singular deixis (e.g. saya, aku, and daku) and first-person-plural deixis (e.g. kami (exclusive ‘we’) and kita (inclusive ‘we’)). Particularly for first-person-plural deixis, in English, there is only ‘we’ that is equal to ‘kami’ and ‘kita’.

The use of “we” in English is still ambiguous because it can refer to either exclusive ‘we’ or inclusive ‘we’ (Levinson, 1985; Yule, 1996). Exclusive ‘we’ refers to the speaker and other(s), but excluding the addressee. Meanwhile, inclusive ‘we’ refers to the speaker and addressee.

In English, the word ‘we’ cannot be understood directly if either the speaker or addressee does not entirely know the context being talked about. In Indonesian, it is certainly different because ‘kita’ and ‘kami’ have different functions from one another.

Recently, there was a trend of using the term “Kita? Elo aja kali.” Such a term basically is an informal oral expression popularly spoken among youngsters. But, actually, the meaning behind it is that the word ‘kami’ is more appropriately used when the speaker tells something that represents him or her and somebody else or some people, excluding the addressee. Through this research, it is going to be identified if such a trend is still found on radio broadcasts.

Radio Broadcast

Radio is a kind of media of information and entertainment with irreplaceable functions, while to watch television always takes time. One can enjoy listening to the radio while doing some other activity, whether at home, in the car or even at the office. Given the high interest in listening to the radio, the tendency of radio audience to imitate what the broadcasters say is high as well. As a kind of media of information for the audience or listeners, radio has been considered as one of the main sources of important information that influence and is related to the community and life (Stavitsky, 1995:vii).

Radio broadcasts are certainly diverse, depending on the segmentation of the audience. The diversity can be based on the music genres, audience segments, models of broadcasts and broadcasters, or program types. Even on the same radio station, the program types are also varied among broadcasts in the mornings, afternoon, and evening.

Language possession is influenced more or less by how often we practice it, either by listening or speaking. Thus, we realize it or not, radio broadcasts can influence the quality of the language we use. If we are accustomed to listening to it and then we use it to communicate to others, there will automatically be some changes in speaking the language, in this case, Indonesian. Through this research, how the native speakers of Indonesian, who are either radio broadcasters or radio audience and interviewees, use deixes ‘kami’ and ‘kita’ on morning broadcasts is investigated.

2. METHODOLOGY

This research is a qualitative research. It is because of its characteristics which are humanistic, focusing on the contexts, interpretative, and choosing the objects from the real life (Marshall and Rossman, 2006:3). In this paper, the data is described in detail based on the related theory. The use of deixes by Indonesian speakers is then presented as a representation of a real usage of Bahasa Indonesia.

The data include utterances spoken by radio broadcasters, audience (listeners), and interviewees, collected by recording radio broadcasts naturally. The data are then categorized as the primary data. They are broadcast recordings of five morning radio stations that can be heard within the area of Semarang and the surroundings. The stations are Delta FM, Prambors, Elshinta, Trijaya, and RRI. Each of them have characteristics typically different from each other, in accordance with the broadcast concepts as well as audience segmentation. The radio broadcasts selected are those broadcasted in the mornings between 8 a.m. and 10 a.m. (Western Indonesian Time) from January 19, 2016 to January 26, 2016. The duration of each of the broadcasts is 60 minutes, so that there are 20 recordings taken from five radio stations (two recordings from each station, started from 8 a.m. and 9 a.m.).

Meanwhile, the secondary data used include notes containing contexts when broadcasters speak. References used are books of theories and the Internet articles related to the radio stations, as complementary sources for this study.

To analyze the data, several steps are taken, such as (1) transcribing utterances (2) sorting necessary data (3) grouping the data in accordance with the purpose of the research (3) and then (4) describing them analytically based on the theories used. All of the steps are taken consecutively.

3. DISCUSSION

Based on the observation on each utterance on five radio broadcasts, generally, there are some shifts of function in the use of deixes 'kami' and 'kita', though to some certain extents, the use of each of the deixes is correct. 'Kita' is the most frequently used, though, overall, some shifts of meaning are found. Meanwhile, 'kami' is always correctly used.

Various Purposes of the Use of Deixes 'Kita' and 'Kami'

The rate of correct uses of deixes 'kami' and 'kita' on morning radio broadcasts observed is overall lower than that of the incorrect ones. The context explaining the meaning behind each utterance justifies it.

The overall use of deixis 'kami' is just 13,5 % out of the entire kita-kami person deixes used on the morning radio broadcasts. Despite these deixis are rarely occur, 'kami' mostly used correctly (only one is ambiguous).

The following is an example of the use of 'kami'.

- (1) "Dan jangan ke mana-mana, kami akan segera kembali setelah ini."
 ("Don't go anywhere. We will be right back after this one.")

The broadcaster gives an utterance explaining that the radio broadcast is about to break for some commercials. Hence, deixis 'kami' has been correctly used, for the broadcaster as the speaker states that this person and the interviewee will have a conversation again with the audience after the break.

Most of all, deixis 'kami' is used when a broadcaster wants to tell to the audience that there will be a break or when a broadcaster re-starts the program after a break. Here is one of the examples, when a broadcaster greeted his listeners.

- (2) "Terima kasih Anda masih mendengarkan siaran 'kami'."
 ("Thank you that you are still listening to our broadcast.")

In utterance (2), the broadcaster represents the radio station, expecting that the addressees, the audience, keep listening to their program. Therefore, the use of 'kami' is surely correct because the side expecting to be listened to is the broadcaster (and the crew involved), not the audience. Based on that, the use of 'kami' is correct.

In addition to deixis 'kami', the use of deixis 'kita' reaches 86,5 % out of the overall use of 'kita-kami' deixes, which refers to this first person plural. Deixis 'kita' should function as a word used to refer to the speaker as well as the addressee, as shown in the following example.

(3) "Dari Jakarta kita beralih ke Jogjakarta..."
 ("From Jakarta, we move to Jogjakarta...")

The use of 'kita' in the utterance of a newscaster on a nationwide radio station above means that the audience are involved in order to turn the attention to another city. This use is correct because the information is directed to all sides that listen or are invited to talk as well as the one uttering.

Another example is in the following, spoken by a phone caller.

(4) "Walau pun 'kita' kalah, ya Kak Desta."
 ("Though 'we lose, don't we, Kak Desta.")

The caller, who is a radio listener, tells about the experience of playing some game with Desta (the speaker). The use of the word 'we' is certainly correct, for in that context, the caller does not involve any other person but the broadcaster, as the subject of the activity.

In addition to the meaning above, the use of deixis 'kita' also means that it represents any subject that can be bound to the topic being talked but actually not directly involved in the conversation, as in the following example::

(5) "Iya, melalui pasar modal, kita bisa menjadi pengusaha di pasar modal."
 ("Yes, through the stock market, we can become entrepreneurs in it.")

The utterance is given by a broadcaster when having a discussion with the interviewee. In the utterance, the use of deixis 'kita' is aimed not only to refer to the broadcaster as the speaker, with the involvement of the audience and interviewee, but also any subject that may do the same in the future.. 'We' in that utterance refers to anyone who will get the same result as what the speaker states if he or she does the thing said by the speaker.

Mistakes: The Negligence of the Use of 'Kami'

In radio Broadcast, 'kita' commonly used by involved parties, broadcasters, listeners/callers, even radio guests. Speakers seems incapable in distinguishing between 'kami' and 'kita' as they use 'kita' to refer to him/her only without the hearer. The followings are some examples of mistakes dealing with the use of the deixes.

In the opening session of a morning broadcast, exactly after a commercial break, a broadcaster greets the audience by using a wrong deixis, as follow.

(6) "Dan...hari ini 'kita' ada semacam info, kawula muda..."
 ("And...today 'we' have some info, guys...")

This example in in a situation where there are two broadcasters one some morning radio program. In this, one of the broadcasters greets the audience and then inform that they will share information with them. The word 'kita' is used surely wrongly, considering that the announcer actually refers to him as the speaker and the partner/crew on duty. He will not involve the audience, the addressees, as the information givers. Therefore, the word 'kami' should be used.

In line with utterance (16), the impropriety appears when the broadcaster fails to use the word 'kami' when inviting the audience to join into the interactive discussion.

(7) "Dan 'kita' ngajak anda ngobrol-ngobrol di Sindo Topik..."
 ("And 'we' invite you to have some conversations on Sindo Topik...")

In the utterance above, the broadcaster looks barely intend to involve the audience as the subjects that invite to join into the discussion. The involvement of the audience is manifested by their role as the side being invited get involved in the discussion. It means that the audience play a role as the addressees so that they don't belong to the category of the first person plural. Even, there is the word 'Anda' (you) addressed to the audience to emphasize the position of the audience, as the addressees.

(8) "Jadi habis ..., Kawula Muda langsung harus telpon 'kita', ya..."
 ("So after..., You Guys, just call 'us'...")

In example (8), the broadcaster asks to be called by the audience. But, the use of 'kita' has a meaning that the broadcaster and the audience are the sides that want to be called by phone. It is impossible because the audience should be the side asked to talk. Thus, the correct deixis for the utterance is 'kami'. Intentionally or not, this is another example of the negligence of the use of 'kami'.

Similar to the mistake above, the following example shows how a broadcaster also chooses to use an incorrect deixis as a reference.

(9) "Sahabat, 'kita' ada informasi dari tim berkuda Jawa Tengah."
 ("Guys, 'we' have some information from the equestrian of Central Java.")

It is impossible for the broadcaster as well as the audience to convey any information about the equestrian team. For if the word 'kita' is what the addresser uses, it means that either the speaker or the addressee is the side who does the action (one who has the information). Whereas, the addressee is actually the side that receives the information. The deixis required to use should be 'kami', referring to the broadcaster and the team on duty.

Other than by broadcasters, mistakes are also committed by radio interviewees. One of the interviewees explains that the number of animals in some local zoo is not yet as many as expected. The interviewee states that,

(10) "Ya, jadi jumlah satwa 'kita' memang koleksinya belum..."
 (Well, the number or 'our' animals is not yet...")

At the time the interviewee says 'our animals', what is meant to say is 'animals that belong together'. However, in the context of giving information to the radio broadcasters (in this case, there are two broadcasters) and audience, the word 'we' seems implying that the addressees (the broadcasters and the audience) also play a role as the managers of the site.

Some evidences of the negligence of deixis 'kami' are also found committed by some interviewees of nationwide radio stations, though not as many as on local radio stations. Below is an example of the mistakes,

(11) "Ya, kali ini 'kita' memberi satu kejutan juga buat pendengar semua..."
 (Well, this time, 'we' would like to give you all some surprise...")

The use of 'kita' in the utterance above is incorrect, for the surprise is intended to be given to the audience (the addressees). On the other hand, if the word 'kita' is used, the audience as the addressees will also become ones who give the surprise.

Incorrectly used 'kita' is also found in some utterances given by some audiences-phone callers on nationwide broadcasts, as in the following example.

(12) "...waktu kuliah saya..., jadi 'kita' jalan ke mana main bareng."
 ("...when I went to college..., well, 'we' hung out at somewhere, together.")

The phone caller-the speaker-is telling about her love story in the past. The word 'kita' in that utterance literally means that both of the speaker and addressee did 'playing together'. However, the intention of the speaker by saying this is not like that, for the addressee is excluded in the story. It should be that the phone caller uses the word 'kami' because she exclusively did the action without involving the addressee.

The Ambiguity of the Use of Deixes 'Kita' and 'Kami'

In the study of deixes 'kita' and 'kami', the meaning referred in each utterance is actually not always easy to understand. The uses of both are sometimes ambiguous, in regard with the utterances where the deixes found. The use of the word 'kami' can mean either functioning or not functioning the audience as the addressees. The same case as in the use of 'kita', which does not always mean that both of the speaker and addressee do some particular activity together.

It is found that there is an ambiguous utterance, as follow. The ambiguity of 'kami' can be seen in the following example,

(13) "'Kami' di sini sudah bergabung dengan pengamat Pemerintahan Undip..."
("'We', in here, have joined with an observer from Governance Undip...")

Such an utterance means that only the broadcaster and the crew have been connected to the interviewee. At glance, such a way of uttering information is correct. However, it is characteristically exclusive, limited just to the involvement of the broadcaster and some other people within the studio. Whereas, all of the sides including the audience also experience that the phone call has been connected. The use of 'kami', thus, becomes not less proper if the context is that the speaker intends to ask the audience to interact to the interviewee. 'Kita' will more properly be used for it will make an impression of closeness and togetherness between the broadcaster-speaker and the audience-listeners or order to be connected as well as to discuss with the interviewee. Hence, the speakers involved are all sides, including the audience.

Other than the ambiguity of 'kami', it is found that there is also an utterance containing 'kita', which will cause multiple perceptions to interpret it. In the utterance, it is not clear who owns the social media and who is inviting.

(14) "Dan 'kita' pun masih mengundang kamu...gabung di Twitter 'kita' di..."
(And 'we' still invite you... join 'our' Twitter on...")

In this example, the broadcaster intends to invite the audience to interact through the radio station's Twitter account. Who the owner of the account becomes unclear. The word 'kita' at the beginning can also mean that the audience invite themselves to join on to the Twitter account. It surely does not make sense. Meanwhile, as for the word 'kita' in the following part, it may mean that the Twitter account belongs to both the broadcasters and the radio manager and the audience.

The Pattern of Mistakes in the Use of Deixes 'Kita' and 'Kami'

According to the previous explanation, it is found that utterances containing deixes 'kita' and 'kami' have mistakes. The mistakes in using such deixes are committed by all parties participating in the conversations or giving information in radio broadcasts, almost all of broadcasters, short news readers, callers, and interviewees have ever made mistakes in using such first-person deixes. However, deixis 'kita' experiences the most significant shift of function, meanwhile deixis 'kami' is always correctly used except that in example (13), which has double meanings.

In terms of the speakers on morning radio broadcasts, the broadcasters of information-based radios make fewer mistakes than those on radio stations with other segments. The broadcasters of radio stations with segment of young listeners have barely mentioned 'kami' in the speeches.

In addition to the broadcasters, phone callers on radio stations targeting young audiences also often make mistakes in using deixis 'kita'. Even, deixis 'kami' is barely used although the subjects that become the references exclude the addressee. Notwithstanding with that, on the state-owned radio station, in spite of targeting young audience, the speakers have correctly used the deixes.

At last, out of five radio stations, there are only two radio stations that have correctly used personal deixes 'kita' and 'kami', in accordance with the linguistic rules that apply in Indonesian.

Furthermore, the two radio stations have different target audiences, i.e. young and adult (professional) audiences. One of them is state-owned, meanwhile the other is a private radio station.

4. CONCLUSION

The research result shows that there are several speakers, including radio broadcasters, callers (audience), and interviewees, who have correctly use deixes 'kita' and 'kami'. Nevertheless, there are many more speakers who make mistakes in using them. Most Indonesian speakers wrongly prefer to use dexis 'kita' in various utterances, ones which would be grammatically correct if 'kami' was used in those instead of 'kita'. In fact, deixis 'kita' is the most frequently used though often incorrectly applied. On the other side, the use of deixis 'kami' is very rare compared to that of 'kita', and always correctly applied.

Generally, news-based radio stations are those which correctly use deixes. Meanwhile, radio stations that target young audience are those with speakers that use deixis 'kita' the most frequently. Even so, there is a radio station that shows a contrast fact. It is a state-owned radio station targetting young audience that has correctly used both 'kita' and 'kami' in accordance with the functions. It can be concluded that the use of both deixes on the utterances recorded indicates a signal of the extinction of deixis 'kami' in Indonesian.
