NOTE

In this international seminar on Language Maintenance and Shift 7 (LAMAS 7 for short), we try to do the new paradigm, that is publishing the proceeding after the seminar was held. The positive aspect of the paradigm is that the presenters of the seminar have opportunity to revise their paper based on the responses of the audience. However, it takes longer time to process the proceeding until it is ready to distribute. Therefore, we apologize for being late.

In this opportunity, we would like to extent our deepest gratitude to Balai Bahasa Jawa Tengah for continuously cooperation in conducting the seminar. Thanks also go to the Dean of the Faculty of Humanities, the Head and the Secretary of the Master Program in Linguistics Diponegoro University, without whom the seminar would not have been possible. We would also express our special thanks to committee for putting together the seminar that gave rise to this compilation of papers.

We would like to thank Mrs. Shu-Chuan Chen, Ph.D. from Asia University Taiwan, Dr. Tupas Topsie Ruanni, from National Institute of Education Singapore, Drs, Pardi M.Hum. from Balai Bahasa Jawa Tengah; Prof. Ketut Artawa, Ph.D. from Udayana University, and Dr. Suharno, M.Ed. from Diponegoro University, as invited speakers in plenary sessions, and to all of the participants of the seminar.

Semarang, September, 25th 2017

THE ROLE OF SUNDAHESE LANGUAGE IN THERAPEUTIC COMMUNICATION AT THE ONCOLOGY CLINIC RSHS

Abstract

The Sundanese language is a local language that has been used by the majority of Indonesians as their daily language. It is the second most widely spoken language after the Javanese language. It is, therefore, not surprising that the Sundanese is used in many types of business including medical institutions directly in touch with society. When doctors and nurses are taking care of patients in a particular ethnic group such as the Sundanese, they may need to master the language so that they are better able to communicate with the patients. Psychologically, the patients may feel less anxious as the doctors are explaining their illness or recovery process in their indigenous language. The use of the language can also be one of the palpable efforts that exhilarates the patients' spirit of life. As later shown, some researches have proven that patients prefer to go to particular hospitals not only because of the medical apparatus they are provided with, or the less distance they have to travel, but also because of the luxurious cultural services they experience. This luxury is the therapeutic communication which takes advantages of the Sundanese language. Therapeutic communication is a type of language transmissions that promotes patients' healing process. It is a process employed by doctors, nurses, and medical staff requiring an approach planned consciously focusing on the patients' recovery. To overcome therapeutic communication's obstacles, the staff need to be ready to reveal their strong emotional feelings towards the patients in an appropriate context. Therefore, the staff must have adequate knowledge regarding this face-to-face process of interacting that focuses on advancing the physical and emotional well-being of the patients.

Keywords: Sundanese, language, therapeutic, communication, hospital.

INTRODUCTION

It has become a common knowledge that Indonesia is a multi ethnic country whose people are not only bilingual but also multilingual, knowing that in general they speak more than two languages on a day-to-day basis. Muhadjir and Lauder (in Sobarna, 2007: 13-17) believe that in the last two decades the spread of Indonesian language usage in various regions in Indonesia had been gradually increasing. However, the study of the proportion of Indonesian and regional languages usage across Indonesia shows that about 85% of Indonesians still use the local language as a colloquial language at home. Therefore, the use of regional languages is still fundamental despite experiencing symptoms of decline in some regions. Furthermore, Sundanese being one of the most spoken regional languages stays on with 27 million people. The population of West Java was put at 47,379,389 in mid-2016 making it the most populous province of Indonesia, and half the population of West Java using Sundanese. This proves a strong position and function of Sundanese as a means of communication in everyday life for the people of West Java.

With regard to social aspects of health and, or, medicine, the relation between a particular language and ethnic group can surely not be regarded without problems. There are still many community members who do not perceive common terms related to health and medicine. Conversely, lots of physicians, nurses, and medical staff do not use the terminology of a particular disease/disorder that people use in a particular region/ ethnic group. One specific example for this is the term athlete's foot. It is also known medically as tinea pedis, a medical term of common skin infection of the feet caused by fungus, but rorombeheun in Sundanese. Without further explanation or question this kind of situation creates a gap of communication between a client (patient) and a physician. The gap is even wider when it comes to chronic diseases; the terms used by medical personnel and physicians are beyond comprehension of the common people. As a result, the communication between the clients and the physicians becomes ineffective and inefficient. This causes a downturn in public health, both physically and mentally. It is also unquestionably in stark contrast to public health improvement programs affirmed by the government.

THEORY AND METHODS

Terminology

The medical terminology for Health Sciences is an essential communication tool. Like many other fields of study, Health Sciences have distinctive terms that practically distinguish them from other fields. Their distinctive vocabularies delineate the uniqueness that patients and personnel of unrelated professional groups may not understand when used by the medical personnel. The Health Sciences are fields that deal with physicians or the treatment of diseases (Sugono, et al., 2008). The practices are so complex involving many parties to get involved in particular processes and systems. In performing their duties, medical personnel inevitably engage in communication with other parties, especially with patients. The effective communication occurring between the patient and the medical personnel, or between the hospital staff and the patients, must be well maintained. However, since Health Sciences have distinctive terms, the uses of particular terms by the personnel are recurrently misunderstood by many patients. This is a problem of language barrier that needs overcoming.

Having changed its name since the Dutch occupation, Hasan Sadikin General Hospital (RSHS – Rumah Sakit Hasan Sadikin) is one of the largest hospitals in Bandung, Indonesia. Established on 15 October 1923, the hospital has gone through the changes until it becomes a hospital with excellent service today. Since the establishment of Faculty of Medicine Universitas Padjadjaran, RSHS has been assigned as the teaching hospital for the students of the faculty.

It is worth noting that in direct communication with patients and providing medical clinic signage, many hospitals, like RSHS, employ terminology that may not be quite understandable and can cause confusion once the patients are inside the medical facility. In addition, it should be noted that clients/patients, who expect excellent service from these hospital, do not always have broad knowledge of medical terms, nor do they attend medical schools. The use directional signs or room signage should be beneficial for people from all walks of life to efficiently locate medical facilities. It takes a process involving introduction and socialization of these specific terms so that the effective communication between medical personnel/ hospitals and patients can actually be achieved. There should be an effort to compile synonymous translation terms for Sundanese medical terminology. The study entitled “The Role of the Sundanese Language in Therapeutic Communication at the Oncology Clinic RSHS” focuses on that particular effort.

The following steps illustrate guidelines of the research process.

The activity of listing medical terminology is conducted by attending RSHS to collect data from medical clinic signage (and all written forms), and interviewing medical personnel and physicians. The activity also involves studies of linguistics especially code-switching and code-mixing of Indonesian and Sundanese through therapeutic communication between researchers/ medical personnel/ physicians and patients (clients).

Code-Switching

Code-switching refers to the practice in a speech community to use different languages in different social situations in order to mark a change in situations (Appel:1976 in Suwito:1985). The case of code-switching can occur from Indonesian to Sundanese, and vice versa. Code switching is classified into two different types: intern code switching and extern code switching (Suwito, 1985: 69). Intern code switching occurs in inter-regional languages in a national language, inter-dialect in a regional language, or in varieties and styles existing in a dialect. Extern codes witching is a switch that occurs among native language and foreign language. There are a number of possible reasons for both codes to simultaneously occur: the speaker may not be able to express him/herself in one language or he/she would like to express solidarity with a particular social group (different interlocutors), to generate a sense of humor, or merely to sound elitist or classy (Shabt:2007 and Crystal:1987). While other factors can be numerous: the social value and status of speakers and intorlocuters, and subjects of conversations, for instances, all ini all the switches occur because of the distinct communication goals the speakers commit to achieve.

In addition to the theories of code-switching, Blom & Gumperz (2000:117-119) believe that

The semantic effect of metaphorical switching depends on the existence of regular relationships between variables and social situations... [which] depending on the circumstances, add a special social meaning of confidentiality or privateness to the conversation.

This is to say that metaphorical switching occures because there is a change of topic. To give a specific example, it occurs when a physician changes the topic of a particular illness to family topics leaving the patient with a more tranquil mind because of the physician's identification with the client's family rather than with his/her illness. Blom& Gumperz (2000:116) continue that

The notion of situational switching assumes a direct relationship between language and the social situation. The linguistic forms employed are critical features of the event in the sense that any violation of selection rules changes members' perception of the event... Furthermore, situations differ in the amount of freedom of choice allowed to speakers.

Situational switching occurs when the codes are used relying upon the situations. The speakers are aware they are using a particular language in a particular situasion, and later shift to another language in another situation. In situational switching, a change of topic requires a change of language.

Code-Mixing

Language alternation within a sentence is also known as code mixing (Grosjean, 1982; Torres, 1989 in Brice & Anderson, 1999). It refers to "the change of one language to another within the same utterance or in the same oral/ written text" (Ho, 2007). Both code shifting and code mixing aretypes of switching common in certain types of bilingual and multilingual communities. This also include conversations among physicians, nurses, medical staff and patients (clients) or patients'family members. Being able to engage with service providers, the patientscan communicate effectively in therapeutic communication.

Therapeutic Communication

Communication is a basic component in human relationships involving the transfer of information, feelings, thoughts, and behavior between communicants and communicators. Chant et al., (2002) in Sleeper &Thompson (2008) write that "Effective communication plays an important role in patient satisfaction, treatment compliance, and recovery."In addition to effective communication skills, to provide care that is patient centered and to ensure safe quality care for patients and their families, there should be practices of respect and compassion while listening to the patient (Preheim et al., 2009 in Webster, 2013). Goldin& Russell (1969) write

Therapeutic communication enables a nurse to know her patien tas an individual and to discern his special needs. While she encourages him to express himself, she should bear in mind the ultimate purpose of such exploration: clearly and simply, to learn the patient's needs in order to give better nursing care. Any patient will sense if a nurse is merely trying to satisfy her curiosity.

The quotation describes that therapeutic communication is a conscious purposeful form of communication which provides the patient with information and emotional support to achieve his maximum health and well-being. It also explains that the practice of therapeutic communication involves empathy and caring, and addresses the patient values, preferences, and beliefs.

Therapeutic communication is more likely to occur when clients, medical personnel and physicians and medical staff highly value the investment of trust. As they engage in a collective action, the potency of the group's resources, and efforts are combined to reach the objective shared by all parties. In the context of hospital services to clients, clients must first believe that nurses and physicians are able to provide services in overcoming their health concerns. Hospital staff must be trustworthy and dependable so that clients do not exhibit signs of hesitation, shame, or secrecy. In addition to this, Stuart & Sundeen (1998) also believe that therapeutic communication should come in interpersonal relationship between nurses and clients. That way they gain a shared learning experiences in order to reduce the client's anxiety and stress. This acquisition of experiences is mostly possible by employing code shifting and code mixing in various forms of communication.

Poernomo (1999) offers 4 steps, known as SAJI (Salam, Ajak Bicara, Jelaskan, Ingatkan or Greet, Start a conversation, Explain, Remind), to achieving productive and meaningful communication. The details of SAJI's explanation are as follows:

Salam/ Greet	Greet clients professionally and show that you are willing to take the time to talk to him/her.
Ajak Bicara/ Start a conversation	Try to engage in interpersonal communication (a two-way communication). Encourage him to talk openly and honestly, expressing his thoughts and feelings. Show him that you value his opinion, and understand his anxiety, and feelings. You can ask open-ended questions and closed-ended questions in an attempt to gain information.
Jelaskan/ Explain	Explain what he is interested in, what he wants to know, and what he will do to avoid being trapped in his own thoughts. Correct false assumptions and provide clear and detailed assessments pertaining to the disease and therapy.
Ingatkan/ Remind	Conversations between medical personnel/ physicians and clients may include a wide range of subjects, which is not easy to remember. At the end of the conversation, remind the clients of important things and correct misperceptions. Always clarify whether they have understood you correctly, or clarify the things that are still unclear, and repeat important information.

In order for the steps of SAJI to be properly understood, the adoption of code shifting and code mixing by medical personnel and physicians should take advantages of Sundanese words and terms commonly used by people in West Java.

FINDINGS

Below are the terms used at the oncology clinic RSHS. The terms were obtained as therapeutic communication techniques were employed.

English	Sundanese	Indonesian
A highly contagious condition, as in scabies, that can easily be passed from one person to another through direct skin contact	Amburatel	Menular ke mana-mana, um. kudis atau penyakit kulit yang asalnya satu tempat menjadi menyebar.
Womb	Baga, tarang baga	Rahim; tarang baga bagian badan di antara kemaluan dan pusar

Swollen	Bareuh	Bengkak
Scratched/ skin injury	Boléksék	Luka lecet
Vitiligo/ loss of skin color	Corob	Penyakit kanker kulit yang menyebabkan kulit seseorang menjadi belang seperti bekas luka bakar
Tumour	Daging jadi	Kanker
Vaginal bleeding during late pregnancy	Darah uncaleun	Darah yang keluar dari vagina sebelum melahirkan; termasuk kasus pendarahan yang tidak lazim dan dapat menyebabkan kematian
Lymph	Getih herang	Getah bening
Thyroid	Gondok	Tiroid
Abrasion/ skin injury	Lédéh	Luka yang mengeluarkan sedikit cairan bening
Severe, malignant	Parna	Parah; sakit berat
Prickly heatrash	Pelentis	Bintik kecil
Insomnia	Pidel	Insomnia
Inflammation	Radang	Penyakit kerusakan jaringan tubuh yang ditandai oleh demam dan pembengkakan (jika sudah lanjut disertai keluar getah bening, darah, nanah, dsb):
Syphilis	Raja singa	Penyakit kelamin yang berbahaya bagi penderita dan pasangannya, juga bagi keturunannya; bersifat menular; sipilis
Getting over a cold	Rerep	Reda; menjadi dingin (tubuh orang sakit); panasnya sudah reda
Pain/itching all over the body	Saksrak, nyaksrak	Terasa (rasa sakit) seujur tubuh bagian dalam
Throbbing headaches	Saut	Senut-senut
Illness	Sawat, panyawat, kasawat	Penyakit; kasawat terkena penyakit
Rolling around in agony	Songkol, sosongkolan	Berguling dengan menggeliat-geliat karena sakit yang hebat

CONCLUSION

The article analyses the importance of therapeutic communication at the oncology clinic RSHS by adopting code shifting and code mixing and taking advantages of Sundanese words and terms commonly used by people in West Java. By employing the techniques, it is expected that the medical personnel and physicians can emphasize a comprehensive view of a client and his network of people who provide support, and the client will then become more comfortable sharing potentially difficult information. The right words and manner of speech are critical to therapeutic communication. It is therefore, the use of Sundanese words may make the communication between the clients and the physicians more effective and efficient.
