Research Component (250 words max)	Research Background Landscape architectural research internationally has identified how conventional forms of landscape representation lack efficacy in revealing the site-specific characteristics of landscapes. Graphic depictions of landscape influence our understanding of landscapes and are therefore intrinsically linked to ecologically sustainable development, but the global growth in landscape photography has prompted critics to deride this media for homogenising understandings of landscape. Research Contribution The significance of Corackerup Breakaway lays in its creative use of photographic media and architecture as a means of recording a landscape's light and spatiality. The work employs a transportable room-sized camera in a manner which is novel to the discipline of photography. Black &amp; White photosensitive paper captures light entering the camera, which is subsequently converted into a photographic darkroom to process the image, an assemblage of sixteen B&amp;W photographs. The mobility of the camera coupled with the homogeneity of the photographic media juxtaposes the site-specificity of the landscape recorded - thus contributing to the revitalisation of photographic landscape representation. Research Significance The significance of this research is demonstrated by the author's commissioning as 'guest artist' for the Perth International Arts Festival (2006); and subsequent funding from the Regional Arts Fund. The impact of this work is evidenced by its inclusion in Hotspot - a two-year exhibition of galleries in Western Australia (2006-7); Publication in Big Country: Great Arts Stories in Regional Australia (2008); A paper presented at the International Federation of Landscape Architects conference (2006); exhibition in Foto-Freo City of Fremantle Festival of Photography, (2008).
