Teen may be tried as adult for murder

THE TEENAGER accused of killing compared to 10-year parole eligibility Linda Lefranc a year ago will be tried as an adult unless an application is made to send the case to youth court.

The 18-year-old man was 17 when Lefranc was stabbed to death in her Braun St. townhouse Dec. 9, 1998, and therefore cannot be named until the status of the future trial is settled.

If the young man is tried as an adult and convicted of first degree murder. he would face life imprisonment with no chance of parole for 25 years - for young offenders convicted of the same crime.

Dressed in a green T-shirt and khaki cargo pants, the accused man sat silently through court appearances last Monday and Tuesday.

He now faces charges of both first and second degree murder in connection with Lefranc's death.

Which charge proceeds depends on whether Crown counsel Michael Fulmer decides there's enough evidence to show there was intent to kill.

First degree murder is defined as murder that is planned and deliberate.

The next court appearance is scheduled for Jan. 21. RCMP inspector Doug Wheler says local residents should rest easier now that an arrest has been made. "It was an extremely terrifying murder for citizens of Terrace," he added. "It had people feeling very uneasy about their security." Wheler said the accused was one of the prime suspects from the very start. "He was one of the ones we looked at very closely," he said. "Everyone in the inner circle to the victim has to be looked at and eliminated," he added.

Wheler said the investigation took a year to complete since there were so many people to interview: family, close friends, Lefranc's school mates and neighbours.

There were also 330 tips or leads generated by police officers and the

He emphasized that cases like this one are very complicated since police need sufficient evidence to take to court to convict anyone.

The accused has been in custody since he was picked up at the Terrace airport by officers as he returned to Terrace from a week in Vancouver.

Terrace on flight path for expanding Westjet

TERRACE AND area does fit into Westjet's plan for service, but not just yet, says its marketing and sales vice president.

"If you think that we are in 12 airports now and will add 12 more on the next several years and there aren't a lot of airports of the size Westjet could come into in western Canada, Terrace is on our radar screen," said Bill Lamberton last week.

"Westjet will come into a community when it is best for Westjet because that's when it will be best for the community because we'll be able to offer a sustained service," he said.

Lamberton's comments follow a campaign on the part of the Terrace and District Chamber of Commerce.

On behalf of some of its members, the chamber asked that letters be sent to Westjet encouraging it to provide service to Ter-

The closest airport providing Westjet service is Prince George and people from here are already driving there because of differences in fares from what is offered here.

There's also been added interest in Westjet because of the planned merger between Air Canada and Canadian Airlines.

And while people from here want Westjet to look to the northwest, last week it announced plans for an eastward expansion.

Westjet won't be announcing locations until next month but it says it will add five B-737 aircraft in 2000 to the 14 it already has in the air.

The B.C. airports now served by Westjet are Prince George, Kelowna, Abbotsford, Vancouver and Victoria.

Westjet began operations in 1996. In 1999 alone, it added four planes.

Hospital heads confident about Y2K preparedness

EXTENSIVE tests have been conducted and more than $300,000 spent upgrading equipment to ensure nothing goes wrong at Mills Memorial Hospital or Terraceview lodge because of Y2K.

Paul Manhas, the hospital's director of finance, says hospital officials and staff are confident about the changeover.

medical supplies and other stock has been doubled to a four-week carrying stock in case of any shortages in early 2000.

The most sensitive issue for hospitals is the public fear that critical life-sustaining medical equipment could fail at midnight Dec. 31st.

Manhas said equipment such as ventilators have been rigourously tested.

"The manufacturer says they're Year 2000 compliant," he says. "We've rolled the date over manually and tested it and it works. We're confident it's going to work."

He noted hospital staff are trained to deal with equipment failures whenever they occur.

"If something bizarre does happen and does go wrong our staff are trained and prepared to deal with that emergency whether that piece of equipment fails on Jan. 1st or at any other time of the year," he said.

As for heat and light, the hospital has always had a generator and has a large on-site fuel tank to power it.

Local fuel suppliers give the hospital top priority in the event of a longterm power problem, Manhas added.

Loggers have witnessed huge change

BUG DOPE.

A logger's best friend when he's out in the bush.

Over the years loggers have gone through a lot of bug spray and a lot of changes, too.

And there'll be more going into the next millennium.

Larry Munson, owner of Clear Creek Contracting, has been in the logging industry for over 30 years and has seen all the changes firsthand.

"It's tough now," he said. "Backthen you could leave a job in the morning and have a new one by the afternoon."

Munson started in the industry three years before he graduated from high school, and has operated almost every type of machinery used to log.

He started out in Nass Camp, and even that has changed considerably.

"It was a big community when I was there," he said. "It's nothing like it was when we were there."

Logging is still a huge industry, but Munson said when he first started the number of guys in the camps was a lot higher than today. "It used to be that a guy could go into the bush and you wouldn't know his full name for three days," Munson joked. That's not the case any more, he said, and many loggers stay in the industry once they get on. One of the loaders working for Munson has been in the bush for over 30

"He's one of the best loaders that we have." Munson said. The average salary for loggers is $23 per hour, but Munson warned that the high pay comes with hard work. Most logging crews start work at 7 a.m. and work until 4:30 or 5:00. But, given that logging sites can be up to two hours away from town, that makes for a 5 a.m. wake-up call. "It's hard on your body for sure," he added.

Hazards in the bush are a constant problem too.

"As soon as you step out of the pick-up there's hazards."

With the improvements in safety gear the number of fatal and serious accidents has gone down, Munson said, but less severe injuries are still very common.

Forestry has a bad name, he said, but it's a learning experience.

"We followed the rules of the day then," he said of logging done in the past. "We did what was acceptable."

Munson said some of the practices

JOBS for loggers have become more scarce with more seasonal interruptions. It's also become safer, with fewer serious and fatal injuries.

from the 1960s and 70s look bad now, but the acceptable practices now could be frowned upon in the future.

"Ten years from now somebody will say 'what were they doing there?' It's all about learning."

The image of raping and pillaging the forests for timber, he said, has stuck to the industry, but isn't true.

"They call us the Brazil of the north, but the trees are 30 feet high where I used to log." The biggest change he's seen is the shift from a ground-based logging to high-lead logging.

Munson drove a CAT for five years in the bush and then drove a skidder,

Tower logging and grapple-yarders are the most common types of logging in the area, he said, and even that technology hasn't changed much over

"The basic way of logging is still the same," he said.

Fallers go into a cut block - which is a maximum of 20ha as opposed to the 50ha to 100ha blocks of the past and then grapple-yarders and towers take out the felled trees.

The trees are graded, either as saw logs or pulp logs, by buckers and then loaded on to a truck.

The area between Hazelton and Terrace, Munson said, consists mostly of hemlock and balsam, but also has a

About 50 per cent of the trees in the area have some degree of rot - called a cull - in them.

"We couldn't survive up here without a pulp mill," he said.

Changes are expected in any industry, but Munson said the one constant in this industry is on-the-job training.

"There's no place where you can send people to get trained except on the job," he said

Most training is done within the company and that is how Munson learned so many of the different posi-

He has been a CAT driver, a grapple-yarder, a faller, a truck driver, a mechanic, a foreman and now a supervisor in the span of his career.

That amounts to a lot of changes during his life, so what does the future hold for this industry?

Munson said change has been fundamental to the logging industry so it will just be another shift in practices.

"We're used to changing so it's just going to be a different way of many shifts, Munson said, little things are taken for granted.

Logging roads are all controlled by C.B. radio.

It seems like a simple thing, but when Munson first started logging they weren't used.

"I don't know how the hell we used to work without them," Munson said.

And with the focus on post-harvest, he said, a new wave of logging is coming in the future.

"A huge change is coming," Munson said of the imminent switch to logging second-growth forests. With trees almost nearing the stage where they can be logged once more, Munson said that switch will be mas-

New technology, he said, shouldn't be too different, but re-harvesting trees will come with new regulations.

He couldn't predict the changes, but said this shows the impact that post-harvest has had on the industry.

"Post-harvest was nothing before and now it's a large portion of the in-

Logging will always be the backbone of B.C., Munson said, it's just a Because the industry has made so matter of modifying over time.

Welcome to the Year 2000

Well, here it is.

The last seconds of this century are running out and we'll soon be using that most unfamiliar number 2000 to describe which year we live in.

It's supposed to be simply a human construct, a numbers game with no more relevance than your car odometer turning over from 99,000 to 100,000.

But we all know better.

This, after all was the year by which time, according to the sci-fi vision of Space 1999, we were all supposed to be prancing about in unisex jumpsuits at a base on the moon.

Or, if you prefer The Jetsons, we'd all be jetting around with rocket backpacks making intergalactic phone calls.

The lingering suggestion of it all was that, yes the world was overcrowded and messy, but soon enough we'd spread out interstellar wings and colonize new homes.

The reality?

The moon hasn't been visited in close to 25 years, a Russian space station in orbit has all but fallen apart, and the Martians seem to shoot down every probe we send their way.

The closest we've come to achieving the past's expectations of the future has been in the realm of communications. Wireless technology is about at the level of Star Trek communicators, and yes the Internet is allowing the creation of astounding advances in information technology on an almost daily basis.

While we're communicating better and better amongst ourselves, we've yet to talk to any extraterrestrial neighbours.

It all gives pause to reflect and consider what's most important – home and those around us.

On giving

IT'S THE season of giving, of re-establishing relationships, and renewing friendships.

Charity coffers grow rapidly at this time of year.

The holidays help revitalize family and rekindle our sense of community.

But as the new year arrives, it's worth remembering the gifts that are given all year round – namely those of volunteers who are the glue that hold our community together.

Countless events wouldn't happen were it not for their efforts.

Nowhere is the power of volunteerism more strongly felt than in smaller towns and cities.

In larger urban areas, the metropolitan core tends to suck away and diffuse the energies that come from people living together in the suburbs.

Here, we are fortunate that rather than disappearing, that energy is magnified and multiplied.

If you have time in the coming year to contribute something back to the community, do so. That warm feeling achieved through the act of giving at Christmas can be sustained all year long.

Hats off to Chretien on Quebec

VICTORIA - Unpopular as it may be, I feel compelled to come to the defence of Jean Chretien, the prime minister.

No sooner did Chretien introduce his Canadian unity legislation than the critics pounded on him.

By taking the initiative, they say, the prime minister is fanning the flames of Quebec separatism. Better to wait and hope that Lucien Bouchard, the premier of Quebec, will not call another referendum. This after years of talk by Bouchard of winning conditions and his intention to keep his dream of Quebec sovereignty on the front burner.

The bill introduced by the prime minister is both sensible an well-timed. It was the next logical step after the ruling last year by the Supreme Court of Canada which basically asserts that Quebec has a right to secede from Canada provided a referendum is based on a clear question and a yes-vote on a clear majority.

Since the court didn't say what would constitute a clear question or a clear majority, it is logical for parliament to clarify the position on both.

According to the legislation, parliament will deal with the clear-question issue if and when it is asked and decide what constitutes a clear majority after the next Quebec referendum.

FROM THE CAPITAL

No negotiations with Quebec over the terms of separation are to take place unless parliament, and by implication the rest of the nation, are satisfied that both conditions have been met.

British Columbia Premier Dan Miller said he has no problem with the legislation. Neither should anyone else.

In the last referendum, the federal government didn't get into the fray until a few weeks before the vote and nearly lost the country. The better than 49-per-cent yes-vote was far too close for comfort.

Most Canadians agreed at the time that the referendum question was so vague that many Quebeckers didn't realize a yes-vote would lead to total separation from Canada and the loss of all the rights and privileges Canadian citizenship confers, from pensions to passports to currency.

In fact, the question inferred that Canada had all but agreed beforehand to start sovereignty association talks with Quebec almost immediately after a yes-vote. And judging from the responses of many French-Canadian Montrealers I talked to in the days preceding the referendum that was, indeed, what they believed.

And even if the question in the next referendum is vague again, a healthy debate in parliament should soon make it clear to Quebeckers just what a yes-vote will entail.

There are, of course, those Anglophones who would put a quick end to the interminable unity debate by kicking Quebec out of confederation rather than endure more referenda. A few of them voiced that opinion during Rex Murphy's Cross-Country Checkup on the CBC two Sundays ago.

While such frustration is understandable it is hardly worth serious consideration. It's bad enough that we have a legal opposition party in Ottawa whose sole reason for existence is to break up the country. To play into their hands by just giving up on Quebec would be lunacy.

I would also remind the hotheads that some of the fiercest defenders of confederation are Quebeckers, not the least of whom are Chretien, Stefan Dion and former prime minister Pierre Trudeau.

Rather than being criticized for tabling the unity bill, Chretien should be commended for taking the initiative instead of waiting for Bouchard to drop the next shoe. By pre-empting Bouchard, Chretien has probably succeeded in substantially diminishing chances for the winning conditions the Quebec premier so fervently hopes for.

As the 1995 referendum came closer and closer to voting day, Chretien remained silent, convinced that the no-side would carry the day without interference from the federal government.

Almost too late, he realized that it was going to be a close call and entered the debate a scant few weeks before the vote.

This time around, the prime minister isn't taking any chances and I'm glad he isn't.

It's a customer-killing strategy

IF THE ACTIONS of a few pub and casino owners in Victoria represent the thinking of all BC pubs and casinos we can rejoice they're not research scientists.

By Christmas Eve we could have pubs and casinos all over BC tossing out pink slips thick as confeiti at a wedding.

On January first, 2000 Workers Compensation Board's nosmoking rules come into effect all across this province.

Pub and casino owners predict a dramatic drop in patronage, necessitating massive staff layoffs. Their fears persist despite California's experience with similar no-smoking rules.

In California, where no-smoking rules similar to WCB's have been in place for months, pubs, restaurants, and casinos have reported no drop in income.

What has happened instead is an exchange of clients --out with the smokers, in with the non-smokers.

Yet December 22, a full ten days before the WCB's ruling comes into force, several Victoria establishments have begun laying off staff. They claim they must to protect their income.

Their logic escapes me. Are these pub and casino owners clairvoyant? Can they reliably predict the public's response to smoking restrictions a full ten days before the legislation kicks in? I suspect they're really saving money by not paying staff for Christmas or New Year's, using the WCB rules as an excuse.

Far more likely, Victoria's mavericks hope, by laying off staff prematurely, to pressure the provincial government to lean on the WCB forcing the board to relax their no-smoking in the workplace rules.

Acting premier Dan Miller virtually bowed to their wishes and invited businesses to pressure the WCB when, in answer to an enterprising reporter's question, Miller said, "If the new WCB rules result in significant job losses, I'll consider using the power of my office to override the WCB and modify the WCB's legislation." Or words to that effect.

Why Miller sways like a hula dancer for these nicoline nuts beats me. He's a committed smoker, I'm told. But that's no excuse for him to water down sensible rules -- rules backed by lung surgeons and oncologists -- designed to protect the health of workers.

For a smoker to play Russian roulette with his own life is one thing. He has no right to jeopardize the life of someone else.

As the man in charge of provincial finances, Miller ought to have a better grasp of smoking's high cost to health care. We all know smoking can lead to heart disease, strokes, lung and throat cancer, plugged blood vessels, gangrene of the feet, amputation of the toes or feet.

One Victoria owner contends if he runs his business with the help of family only, he won't have to comply with WCB rules. Obviously money means more to him than his family's health.

Businesses should listen to ex-smokers. Not only do they feel better. They have $150 a month more to spend.

Public relations and associated costs surrounding the provincial government's promoting of the Nisga'a treaty will top $7 million by the end of February, say government officials.

The actual costs will even be higher as the salaries of a lot of the people working on what's called the Nisga'a Treaty Implementation Project are being covered by various government ministries.

Tracking of expenditures began in June 1998.

Forest companies received a bit of good news yearly in the new year - a reduction in the stumpage paid to the province on wood cut in the coastal area.

The new rate is $25.16 a cubic metre, down $2.61 from what it had been. But the rate for interior wood did go up. Pulp stumpage remains the same.

A first hint at financial problems at Mills Memorial Höspital surfaced when a report indicated that continuing budget deficits will essentially leave the facility insolvent by the spring of 2000 unless something happens.

This resulted in the decision to hire a person to come in and oversee overall expenses. Although the person's salary will be covered by the health ministry, officials said this should not be taken as a sign that the hospital has been put under a form of trusteeship in which the province is in control of the facility

Continuing high costs in the intensive care unit and in the psychiatric ward, coupled with the expense of recruiting specialists, are some of the reasons listed for the hospital's precarious - situation.

The decision to make a new Skeena Secondary School a Grade 8 - 12 facility and the possibility of converting Caledonia Senior Secondary to a Grade 8 - 12 school has angered some parents and teachers.

Consider Tax Implications When Choosing Mutual Funds

Registered Retirement Savings Plan (RRSP) because taxes are deferred. But when buying mutual funds for a non-registered account, it also pays to look beyond fund performance numbers and consider the tax implications.

The type of fund you choose will determine the amount of tax you pay. That's because different types of investments generate different types of income. And each form of investment income is taxed differently. For example, bond funds, balanced funds and money market funds generate interest income. If these funds are held in a non-registered plan, the interest income is fully taxable at your marginal tax rate. (Your marginal tax rate is determined by the amount of tax you would pay on each additional dollar of income, which is in turn calculated on your combined income from all sources.)

Revenue Canada taxes income earned from mutual fund investments at three rates. The first rate, full taxation, applies to interest income. This rate offers no tax advantage to investors, and therefore funds tax-advantageous to investors.

To promote investment in Canadian companies, Canada Revenue introduced the dividend tax credit. Income earned from dividends is taxed at about two thirds of your marginal tax rate. This applies to dividends from mutual funds, as well as from individual stocks. Both equity and balanced funds generate income from dividends. Capital gains are taxed at three-quarters of your marginal tax rate. You can earn capital gains income from your mutual fund investments in two ways:

It's well known that which generate interest •when you sell your fund units for more than their original purchase price (for example, if you bought units worth $1,000 and sold them for $1,500, the $500 capital gain you earned would be taxed at three-quarters of your marginal tax rate).

> when the fund manager sells securities in the funds investment portfolio at a profit and flows through the capital gains through a distribution to the investor.

Almost all mutual funds produce capital gains over time, but this is especially true for equity and balanced funds.

Important information about any mutual fund is contained in its simplified prospectus. Unit value's & investment returns will fluctuate. Read your prospectus carefully before investing, Peter Arcadi is an Independent Contractor with Primerica Financial Services.

Shape up, Medical Equipment Loan Service bad drivers Dear Sir:

It never ceases to amaze me how stupid some new drivers really are. Those are the ones with the big green and black "N" on the backs of their parent's vehicles.

Blatant disregard for the regulations should be dealt with swiftly and harshly without reprieve.

I am not saying that all new drivers fall in this category, but the proof is in any given day. Along Munroe St. past the schools, a great many young drivers drive like the vehicle they're in is stolen.

I know that these vehicles must be the parent's because I can't think of any young person that would have the money or the high paying job to purchase a new minivan, Ford Explorers or new pick-ups that I see doing Mach 3.

I had thought this was just a lunch hour thing, but I see this happening more and more throughout the day. The danger is so extreme that one, just one foolish person behind the wheel of a car will end up killing someone in a crosswalk or on the side of the roadway.

I always carry a pen and paper with me now, so that when I see this sort of thing taking place, I take down the license plate number, color and type of vehicle and a description of the driver and then forward this information to the RCMP and let them take care of the problem.

As always, with enough information the RCMP will get the bad driver off the road.

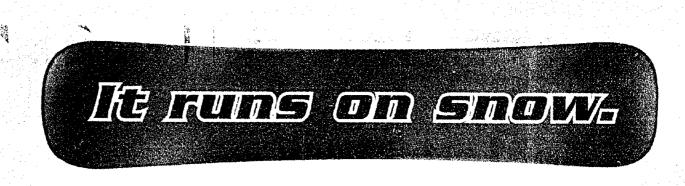

There are too many small children that live in this area for this kind of dangerous driving. I like to believe that most new drivers will, in fact, drive responsibly, but there are those that just want to be noticed by their peers.

For those that drive dangerously, well, you know who you are and your driving practices are letting everyone that wish to see their children safe on public streets know who you are. Better slow down or your parents may be paying the price of a law suit after you have hurt or worse, killed someone. Think about it.

Wheels of justice turn slowly for northwest cocaine kingpin

Police officer disgusted by sentencing delays

ing of a Terrace man who pleaded guilty to importing a kilogram of cocaine here in 1996, has local RCMP officers wondering if David Edwardsen will ever spend any time in jail.

Edwardsen pleaded guilty in February, 1999 to possession of cocaine for the purposes of trafficking after a second man, who has already served time for the offence, was arrested near Smithers with cocaine Oct. 6, 1996.

Edwardsen was originally scheduled to be sentenced Mar. 15 but the case was delayed after Edwardsen fired his Vancouver-based lawyer, John Cheevers.

Judge Peter G. Fraser then allowed Edwardsen to work here during the logging season last summer to raise money for child support before serving a possible jail term and his sentencing hearing was moved to Nov. 26.

But that date was pushed back to Jan. 6, 2000 so Edwardsen, who is in the process of hiring yet another lawyer, will have enough time to prepare for the hearing.

The delay has officers here wondering how the delay impacts RCMP reputation and drugrelated court cases.

"It makes us look like we're the biggest By CHRISTIANA WIENS

> "Eventually they'll just say he's waited long enough and let him ao. Nothina surprises me about the court system anymore."

Udsen said Edwardsen's "delay tactics" set a dangerous precedent because other dealers will know they can stall the courts until the case is tossed out of the system.

"Eventually they'll just say he's waited long enough and let him go," said Udsen. 'Nothing surprises me about the court system anymore.'

Edwardsen has also recently had jewellery, including a diamond Rolex, gold chains, rings and nuggets, seized to pay arrears on child maintenance.

Edwardsen's case took longer than average to reach court after a lengthy preliminary hearing in Smithers and a Vancouver trial.

At one point prosecutor Brian Sedgewick, the federal Crown lawyer who handled the trial, said the case was in danger of being dismissed because of time delays.

He said a deal - to put Edwardsen and Brien Burchell, who was arrested with the cocaine, behind bars and to stay charges against a third man, Stanley Homeniuk - had to be made to secure a guilty plea.

When he is sentenced, Edwardsen is likely to see the same nine-month sentence as Burchell who pled guilty to a similar charge Feb. 10, said Sedgewick.

The RCMP investigation that caught Edwardsen was led by North District detachment in Prince Rupert and saw officers monitor sixmonths of taped conversations between Edwardsen and Burchell.

RCMP in Smithers arrested Edwardsen when Burchell was stopped on Hwy16 west of Smithers with a kilogram of cocaine.

RCMP say Burchell was en route here with the cocaine stashed in the rear seat cushion of a rented grey 1996 Ford Explorer to drop the high quality cocaine off to Edwardsen.

Hospital may use lodge

THERE MAY yet be a future for the now-closed Sleeping Beauty medical hostel on the grounds of Mills Memorial Hospital.

The plan is to convert it to administration offices and have adult mental health services move into the resulting vacancy, says Tom Novak, the acting head of the Terrace Area Health Council which runs Mills.

The lodge is a former nurses' residence and was renovated with close to $200,000 from the provincial government five years ago as a place to stay for people who needed the hospital but who didn't need to be patients

When the hospital began cutting back on beds, business at the lodge dropped and it can no longer sustain itself.

"We've got some committees working on it right now," said Novak of possible uses.

"What ever we do will cost money. Right now it is a series of bedrooms," he said.

The regional community mental health program is now housed in the of fice complex containing the Northwest Communitv Health Services Society (the old Skeena Health Unit).

Putting mental health inside the hospital means it will then be right beside the 10-bed regional psychiatric ward at Mills.

So combining administrative and other services will end up costing less money overall, said Novak.

"What we're trying to do is integrate management, to create a regional mental health system," he said.

That would then remove mental health services from the Terrace and Area Health Council's responsibilities, Novak continued.

He said the lodge building is suitable for the health council's needs as its administration arm no longer needs the kind of space it now occupies inside the hospital itself.

The decision to close the lodge was reached after a meeting between the health council and a group of Elks and Order of the Royal Purple members who had been running the facility since it opened.

Ban unfair election tax subsidies, party says

IT'S TIME to end federal election practices that are so unfair they border on corruption, says Christian Heritage Party leader Ron

Gray. Gray, who toured the Skeena riding last month to meet some of the party's 230 members in the region, is trying to generate a groundswell of public pressure to force the Liberals to change the amendments to the Election Act the government has proposed. Most objectionable, says Gray, is the 25-yearold policy - which the Liberals plan to leave unchanged - that refunds 50 per cent of election expenses to candidates that get more than 15 per cent of the vote.

It means established parties and candidates come to each election with a huge-advantage the party is looking for is a ...

A candidates that spent $64,000 in the previous election - and got at least 15 per cent of the votes gets $32,000 of that back to spend next time.

"They start with their war chests already half full of taxpayers' dollars," Gray said.

The Christian Heritage Party wants a mechanism as part of income tax returns that would allow taxpayers to designate which party or parties they want supported in that way with their tax dollars.

The Reform Party has not supported the CHP on that idea, Gray said, adding that since many Reformers are now well established, it's difficult for them to turn their backs on the advantage the law presently gives them.

Gray said the party is also supporting a Liberal backbencher's efforts to ban taxpayer funded institutions from making donations to political parties.

Other electoral reforms representation, and away from the present first-pastthe-post system that elects whichever candidate gets the most votes.

Proportional representation - which gives a party the same number of MPs as the percentage of the popular vote it receives would dramatically improve the chances of the smaller parties like the Green Party and Christian Heritage Party.

"It's clearly an idea whose time has come," Gray said, adding all major industrialized nations except Canada and the U.S. have begun to try some variant of it. Also high on the party's agenda is emphasizing the importance of retaining reference to the supremacy of God in the constitution.

Gray met party members in Terrace Thursday night at the Happy Gang Centre.

He's urging members to get ready for a federal election probably in spring move toward proportional 2001 but possibly as early as next fall - which would be the three-and-a-half year mark of the present

VIA adds cars to popular Skeena

VIA RAIL is adding another car to its daylight Skeena rail passenger service between Prince George and Prince Rupert in response to passenger demand.

Passenger numbers for the first class Totem service increased by 26 per cent this year from mid-May to mid-October over

And 1998's figures were themselves up 25 per cent from 1997, says Mark Pradine of the federal crown corporation.

'With this kind of demand, we're putting on one additional car to the two we already have for Totem class," he said.

Totem class includes meals and access to a dome viewing car and is popular for the growing number of tourists taking the rail journey.

"With this kind of demand, we're putting on one additional car to the two we already have for Totem class."

There's also one economy car and its usage has also increased, said Pradine.

The Skeena run was once threatened for cancellation because of low passenger counts due, in part, to inconvienent arrival and departure times.

But a decision by VIA Rail three years ago to shift to an all daylight schedule between Prince George and Prince Rupert has resulted in its growing popularity, particularly among tourists, said Pra-

"The majority of traffic comes from Americans but we do get an awful lot of Europeans," he said.

Most of the tourists are on package arrangements with the rail journey making up one part of a longer and more extensive holiday.

Pradine acknowledged that there is still a gap between revenue and expenses. But the gap has narrowed A large gap between revenues and expenses was one of the reasons the passenger service was threatened in the first place.

COMFORT ON CONCRETE

Gov't officials hunker down in local bunker for Y2K

IF YOU'RE going away for the holidays and won't be back until after New Year's, the provincial government wants you to know your house is in good hands.

The B.C. government is setting up a command centre in BC Hydro Building in Terrace in preparation for whatever Y2K throws its way.

And, whether that's a power glitch, a train derailment or an accident on the highway, provincial government representatives will there to move people, resources or material to direct emergency operations.

Government spokesperson David Belford last week the command centre will be staffed by up to 30 representatives of provincial agencies, including the Provincial Emergency Preparedness Program, the RCMP, the ministry of the environment, transportation and highways, forestry, health, B.C. Hydro, Pacific Northern Gas and B.C. Tel.

"We'll be working together as a team," said Belford.

The command centre, has been completely stocked with dedicated phone lines and computers as well as a backup generator to make sure the computers will have enough power to operate.

Belford said locals that will be in town should take normal precautions to be prepared for whatever happens.

"You need to be prepared for the unexpected," said Belford.

He said people will need at least three days of food and emergency supplies such as flashlights and batteries as well as any personal necessities.

"If you're a diabetic or you require additional medication, you should have that available," said Belford.

But the toughest part of Y2K may be the human mischief factor where hackers and looters try to take advantage of general paranoia.

"Humanity is pretty hard to predict," said Belford. "There are any number of possibilities out there."

Belford added people should be aware of unusual circumstances but not overreact because ultimately, a number of unrelated glitches are bound to happen.

"It may be just the way things are working at that particular time," said Belford.

So with less than a week to go before one of the largest emergency preparedness events ever in the Northwest, Belford is appealing for a cool-headed approach to the millennium.

"Be calm and ready to respond to any emergency," he said. "More importantly, enjoy a very pleasant and relaxing holiday."

Council duo back at RD

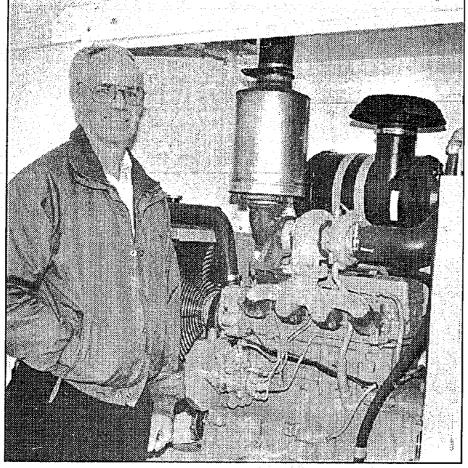

TERRACE's reps to the Kitimat-Stikine regional district board will once again be mayor Jack Talstra and councillor Rich McDaniel.

The two didn't take the appointment to the regional governing body unchallenged, however.

Councillors Olga Power and David Hull also allowed their names to stand, forcing a vote of council to fill the two positions.

Talstra got five votes and McDaniel got four, edging out Hull's three and Power's two votes.

Kitimat rep Joanne Monahgan was re-elected chair of the regional district for 2000 at the board's Dec. 10 inaugural meeting.

POWER ON WHEELS: City of Terrace director of engineering Stew Christensen has a portable generator ready to go where it's needed if the power goes out because of Y2K. It would mainly be used to run sewage lift stations.

Keep your vents and meter clear for a safe and carefree winter.

When the snow needs shoveling, it's probably a good time to take a look at your outdoor gas meter. Overhead icicles and freezing run-off can create problems for the meter and the connections.

If you find a build-up of snow or ice on your meter, never kick or hit the meter in an attempt to remove it. If you feel there is a potential problem please contact your local Pacific Northern Gas office.

Tips for a safe Meter

- Do not shovel snow up against your meter.
- Remove any icicles from overhead eaves troughs.
- Be careful when operating a snow blower or plow near a gas meter.
- Ensure dripping water doesn't splash and freeze on meter piping.

All inspections of natural gas equipment should be done by

Safety Tip

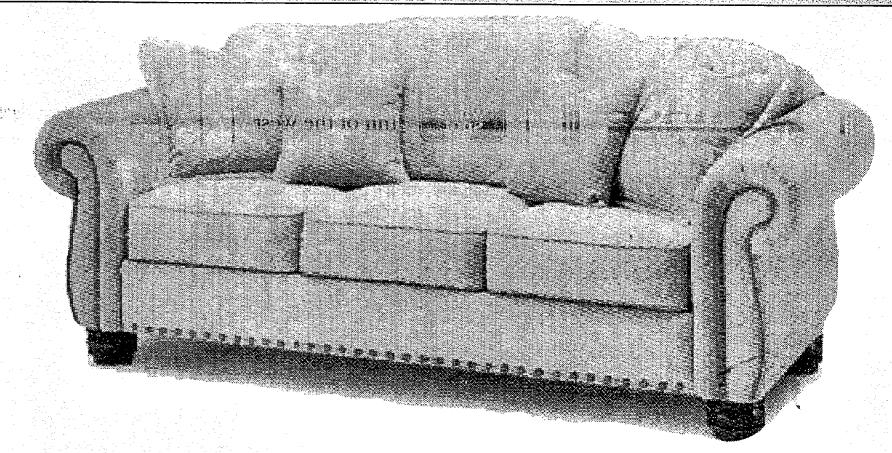

Natural Gas equipment should be kept clean and free of dust, lint, newspapers, rags, sawdust and litter, which not only are a fire hazard, but could also block equipment air intakes. Nothing should be stored on furnaces, water heaters, or any other natural gas equipment. Air needs to circulate freely around equipment. Combustibles must be kept away from natural gas equipment.

Smell a Problem?

One of the safety features of natural gas is its odour—a smell like rotten eggs. If you smell natural gas or suspect carbon monoxide call your local Pacific Northern Gas office immediately.

Be Smart, Don't Drink & Drive!

This message is brought to you by these community minded businesses.

Whether you are going to a fancy work party, casual or traditional family get together, it is important to plan ahead and designate a driver for the day/evening. There are plenty of alternative beverages for the designated driver including non-alcoholic beers, for those who still enjoy the real taste of beer without the alcohol.

Often party planners will make arrangements for guests to sleep over so that there is no risk whatsoever of people driving while under the influence of alcohol. If your host has organized a lift home for you either with a friend or by running you home themselves, accept graciously - remember if they didn't want to do it they wouldn't have offered.

Make sure your holiday season has a happy ending.

REMEMBER, IF YOU ARE A NOVICE DRIVER, NO AMOUNT OF ALCOHOL CAN BE PRESENT IN YOUR BODY!

News In Brief

Man killed in crash

A TWO-VEHICLE accident on Hwy 37 South claimed the life of a Burnaby man Dec. 17.

Mark Angelo Baldonaro, 26, was the lone occupant of a 1986 Prelude that went out of control about one kilometre north of the Kitimat River bridge, crossed the centre line and collided with an oncoming Ford pick-up.

The pick-up struck the Prelude's driver's door, killing Baldonaro instantly.

The driver of the pick up, a 68-year-old Kitimat man, was taken to Kitimat General Hospital with minor injuries.

About that garbage

MIGHTY MOE has an idea to solve the area's dilemma over where its garbage should go.

He favours a concept developed by five companies in Ontario to handle that province's garbage from its major urban centres.

The five have a system whereby they'll collect the garbage, recycle as much of it as possible and then ship it by rail north to a former mine at Kirkland Lake for disposal.

Mighty Moe says he knows of the system because Kirkland Lake is his home territory and a good friend of his is involved in the effort.

Doing something like that here would be beneficial, he says.

The five companies include Canadian Waste Services (which has an operation here), and CN hoped would force governments to shift their stance.

The first test of the treaty came in the 1996 provincial election. The treaty - then at the agreement-in-principle stage that laid out most of the provisions - never became a massive issue either locally or province-wide.

The NDP government and Skeena NDP MLA Helmut Giesbrecht were re-elected, with considerable help from a split of the right-wing vote. "It was a failure on the part of the media in Vancouver to understand the importance of the agreement-in-principle," Scott says. "It was extremely difficult to make it an election issue because the media wasn't interested."

Two years of detailed negotiations ensued and the final treaty was concluded in August of 1998.

Terrace mayor Jack Talstra and city councillors came out in general support of the treaty that fall, although they avoided at every turn having a formal debate about it.

An effort to have all B.C. municipalities add a referendum question on the treaty to the ballot in November's municipal elections was rejected in all but two north Okanagan communities.

This fall, Talstra and other northwest municipal leaders voiced their councils' support for the treaty before House of Commons committee hearings that travelled to Terrace.

Scott denounced Talstra's stand, saying he had no mandate to take a protreaty position on behalf of Terrace residents.

By then new municipal elections were underway the ultimate test of whether mayors and councillors reflect voters' wishes.

Virtually every candidate for Terrace council came out in support of the treaty. It was a non-issue in all-candidates debates relative to the multiplex and local spending priorities. Talstra and all incumbents were re-elected.

Scott says it was frustrating to see politicians in his own town line up against him on the issue.

It was also a weakness that the Liberals in Ottawa exploited, raising Terrace council's treaty support in debate with Scott in the House of Commons. "I found it surprising that virtually everyone running for office in municipal elections was supporting the treaty," he

"I believe that everyone taking that position is making a fundamental mistake in supporting the treaty and I believe they are offside with what the majority of people in the communities of Terrace and Kitimat believe."

Terrace city councillor David Hull says he voted for Scott but won't do so

"At the end of the day, what has Mike Scott accomplished?" Hull asks. "A lot of people who were Mike Scott supporters in the past are saying they wouldn't vote for him again.'

"I don't honestly think he does represent the real concerns of the people of this riding," he says.

Hull said Scott's futile fight against the treaty has been a waste of time and energy that could have been spent working for the riding on other issues, and playing an important role as the treaty moves into the implementation phase.

"He seems to have trouble accepting reality," Hull said. "The reality is the Nisga'a agreement is done. Get over it and let's spend the time on what could make a difference."

Scott has also been under steady fire from native leaders in the riding who claim they have trouble getting meetings or results from their MP. The latest shot came from the Kitamaat Village band council, which wrote a letter to the prime minister asking that a Liberal MP be appointed to act for them in Skeena.

Scott says the volume of criticism does give him

"There's no single issue that's consumed as much of my time as the Nisga'a treaty," he says. "At some point I'm going to have to evaluate where I go from here personally."

Scott says he wants to continue as Reform's aboriginal affairs critic, but is rethinking his role.

"You have to evaluate whether efforts you've made are making a difference," he said. "You have to evaluate whether you are in some way offside with people who you are trying to represent. If you are offside you have to question what you are doing.'

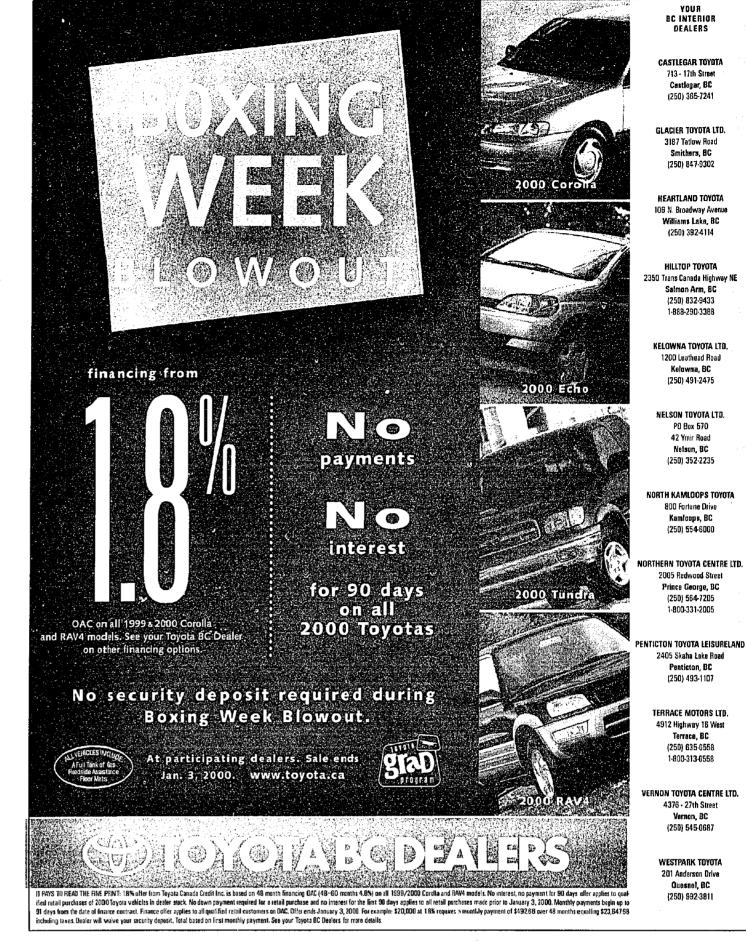

"I recognize that I will be held accountable for the positions I've held with respect to the treaty and I'm most prepared to do that."

HAPPY BIRTHDAY: Harvey Doll celebrated his 103rd birthday December 21 with his son Stan Doll, granddaughter Darlene Striker, great-granddaughter Jamie Striker and 60 other friends at Terraceview lodge.

Harvey's 103 years old!

At the party, Doll was recognized by city councillors, staff and his friends Terrace pioneer.

Sandra Horbachewsky. at Terraceview Lodge said Doll is always happy and

"He always waves and greets people when they come in the door," Horbachewsky said. "Everyone appreciates him."

Doll was born December 21, 1896 in Waterloo, Ontario.

He met his wife Caro-

After they married, Harvey and Caroline moved to Alberta, where Harvey farmed and operated a steam thresher.

A few years later, the as a cheerful, charismatic couple moved to Woodcock, B.C. so Harvey could work cutting rail resident care coordinator ties, shakes and poles, which were transported to Prince Rupert.

The couple first arrived in Terrace in 1927, the year the city was incorporated into a village.

They bought property on Brauns Island, where Caroline made butter, cheese and soap. She also sewed and hooked rugs. But the Dolls house was lost in the 1936 flood, forcing them to rent a house in town.

Harvey worked for Clare Giggie in the mill yard and was able to take half his wages in lumber. which he used to build a new home on Park Avenue (where the medical centre is located today.) Harvey and Caroline contributed to the first medical services in Terrace.

At the time there wasn't a hospital in town, so Caroline, who was trained as a midwife, often delivered babies and nursed patients in their own home. She worked side by side Dr. Stanley Mills and Dr. Bennest helping the physi-

RCMP Cpl. Derek Ayers and Northwest Addiction Service workers Gladys Anaka and Maria Almeida urge locals to tie red ribbons to their vehicles' antennae this Christmas A red ribbon says you won't drink and drive this holiday season. Ribbons can be found at various gas stations, supermarket and restaurants around Terrace.

CONTRIBUTED

AS CHRISTMAS nears, take a moment to look at the people you love - your wife, husband, mother, father, sisters, brothers or your children and friends.

Really watch them - watch how they move, how they play.

Now picture this: They are laying in a hospital bed on life support. Not moving. They are attached to tubes, hoses, monitors, as you sit by their side thinking, "Oh, Gosh. Why did this happen?"

It doesn't have to if you don't drink The Red Ribbon Campaign was started by Mothers Against Drunk Drivers. This campaign has spread across Canada and the US, and now every year during the holiday season local businesses display baskets of red ribbons.

Drivers are invited to pick up a ribbon and "tie one on" the side mirror or antenna of their vehicle.

This lets everyone know that they won't be drinking and driving.

The red ribbon campaign continues until January 7. The Northwest Addiction Services wishes the community a safe and happy holiday.

THE KINSMEN Club of Terrace is calling on ALL past participants and any brave and worthy new participants to "Jump into the Millennium" at the Kermodei Bear Swim 2000 at 1 p.m. this New Years Day.

This year there are enhanced prizes based on amount of money raised. As always your efforts will go to help a number of Local Charities supported by both Kinsmen and Kinettes.

There will be plenty of room for spectators at the Kiddies Camp on 1st Avenue at Lakelse Lake, and the Kinettes will be serving hot drinks and a light, hot lunch. So bring the family and enjoy the spectacle.

We are also asking participants to challenge someone else to jump and raise as much pledge money as they

We will be announcing challengers and winners at the event and will publish results after the swim. Take the opportunity to interact with competitors, suppliers or customers and have the most memorable New years Day 2000 imaginable.

There will be plenty of room for spectators at the Kiddies Camp on 1st Avenue at Lakelse Lake, and the Kinettes will be serving hot drinks and a light, hot lunch. So bring the family and enjoy the spectacle.

Please pick up your registration form at Valhalla Pure Outfitters beside the Subway in Downtown Terrace ASAP so that you can begin getting pledges right now.

Bruce Martindale (635-3748) the "Chairman" of the event is prepared to jump in (or run in) as many times as there are jumpers that exceed what he is able to raise

He is also challenging any Terrace and District Chamber of Commerce Members or Directors to beat him. So come and jump, or Just come and watch as a bunch of crazy northerners "Jump into the Millennium".

YOUR HEALTH by Claudia Perry

What about Magnesium? Part II Eating excess protein will cause us to lose minerals. One large study indicated that people who eat all types of foods (including meat) had a 17% greater loss of bone-mass than did a similar group of lacto-ovo vegetarians. So go easy on the steak.

While you may accept that salt contributes to high blood pressure, did you know it's a factor in calcium and magnesium loss? A study showed that people eating 3600 mg. of salt excreted 30% more calcium and magnesium than did people who ale only 1600 mg. We know that sugar is bad for our teeth and weight. Research shows it also depletes these precious minerals. Drinking carbonated soft drinks and caffeine are two more habits that put our structural systems at risk. They have both been demonstrated to deplete our bodies of valuable minerals.

THE SOLUTION: Building strong bones begins in childhood and continues throughout our lives. Steer clear of chips, processed meats and soft drinks. Limit coffee to one or two cups daily and reduce your sweets. Enjoy more vegetable and introduce whole grains such as millet and brown rice to your diet

Look for an easily absorbed supplement with a proper ratio of chelated calcium and magnesium. Using a balanced formulation could nourish your body so that it will be truly enriched with calcium.

Healthy bodies work, play, and feel better!

Way to go Cal

TODAY'S TEENAGERS are lazy, no good and so and sos and their teachers are overpaid and under worked ..Right!

If you are one of the people holding this opinion you obviously missed Caledonia's West Side Story that filled the R.E.M. Lee Theatre with three performances.

Being a parent of one of the students taking part in the production I know first hand the huge task it is to put such an ambitious program together. How teachers and students for nearly two months spent almost every afternoon and evening building, playing and rehearsing. To the teachers I say thank you for so freely of you going that extra mile to promote enthusiasm, work ethics, and team spirit. It was wonderful entertainment.

To all the students that participated in the production and performance, I say way to go, guys.

The joy of fishing ou wouldn't know there were mountains in this valley, what with the sky so low and gray it's gathered the fog unto itself, filled the valleys, spread out over the flat lands, and made sharp peaks look like hills. But they're there, behind that damp curtain. There's a range of them just downstream of this spot.

You can't see it now, but the middle one has a vee shaped avalanche chute running down its middle. In the summer it's filled with alder so lush and green when its watered by falls that cascade down its steep slopes, it shimmers in the sun. You've got to come back here in the Spring - late April, May, maybe and see this place under a clear sky. It'll take your breath away.

That platform? That's a gun turret, I'm told, put there by the railway so they can blast the same chute and cause small slides before the snow makes a troublesome one. It's a long shot alright.

That's the Usk Chapel: a small room with a roof and only a pew or two. I think it's nondenominational. If it has a congregation it's small or they worship in shifts; it'd be a wonderful place for a small wedding.

This is Chimdemash. You can catch fish here. Trout pass by from time to time and a load of salmon in summer, but there's washing machine water at the front of it and frog water below. It turns your line into a serpent.

It's the same at a lot of creek mouths. You can probe them with lures or soak a worm, but they don't take kindly to flies. Besides, slugging to the river through all that thigh high snow makes you hot and wet, then cold at the end of the day.

We'll go further inland. It'll only take another half hour. I hate this slush. When those big chip trucks roar by they cover you with it. Still, I suppose it's better than ice or blinding flakes as big as your hand. As long as it's soft and wet like this the river won't freeze. That's a bonus, for sure.

Behind us there's a range of mountains called the Seven Sisters. You'll have to come back for these too. They're really spectacular, white and sharp, especially from the far side of the river. This is Cedarvale. There used to be emus in this field, big meat birds with giant drumsticks. That's why I call this the Ostrich Run. It's actually a place to fish moving fish.

There's not much architecture on the bottom of the river here, just a few holes where fish like to lay by for a little while. Sometimes I catch a steelhead here, most often I don't. There may be a dolly varden or two. I can't say. I've never fished here this late in the year.

Watch your step, these rocks are slick at the best of times. A fisherman's always standing in some form of water at this time of year.

No, they're not wolves. They're dogs. They sound like a pack of wolves, don't they? I'm sure they how! like that in the fall and summer too. I haven't noticed them then, probably because the land absorbs sound so much better when leaves are on the trees and there's no snow on the ground.

The river is louder then too, and there's lots of other sonic competition. That growl is the grader, the one we passed a few miles back. It's amazing how sounds carry when the land is wet and reflective. This is a new fly. It's simple - you just take a crosscut strip of rabbit then tie it on the back of the hook so a tail as long as the hook sticks out the back. Then you wind the strip forward over the hook and over a brass bead tied in at the front. Next you wind some olive hackle then dub olive and brown fur over the head. The bead at the front helps you form a big head, and it makes the fly dive for the rocks like fleeing sculpins do. See, it's the same colour as the rocks here.

That's the old ferry cable below us. On the far side you can see the old post office, the one with the windows that look like black eyes. I hear the old woman that used to run it passed over a few years ago. Now it looks like somebody has ransacked the place. Too bad. I think it was one of the oldest post offices in the province.

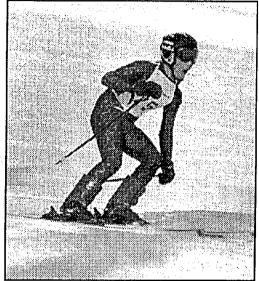

Here's a dolly varden. Its a big one, but too small for this rod. It's taken the fly deeply. I'm going to kill it. There look at that. That's no dolly. That's a steelhead. Let it run a few times. It won't jump at this time of year. There it is. A summer fish. See how red it is. It's the most colourful thing you'll see today when everything is brown or white or gray.

Man, what is that fish doing here now? You'd think it'd be at the bottom of a deep pool somewhere. Fishing is full of discoveries and surprises, eh?
