WHAT LIES BENEATH?

How patterns in ecology and evolution inform us about underlying processes

The research reported in this thesis was carried out at the Community and Conservation Ecology Group, which is part of the Centre for Ecological and Evolutionary Studies of the University of Groningen (The Netherlands), according to the requirements of the Graduate School of Science (Faculty of Mathematics and Natural Sciences, University of Groningen).

Part of this work is funded by the Schure-Beijerinck-Popping Fonds and by the Gratama Stichting.

The printing of this thesis was partly funded by the University of Groningen and the Faculty of Mathematics and Natural Sciences.

Contents

Introduction	7
Chapter 1	17
A new modeling approach estimates the relative importance of different community assembly processes
Chapter 2	53
Stochastic processes dominate community assembly in cichlid communities at the shore of Lake Tanganyika, Zambia
Chapter 3	79
A sampling formula for ecological communities with multiple dispersal syndromes
Chapter 4	107
Joint Inference of phylogeny and diversification rates from molecular sequences does not outperform a 2-step approach
Chapter 5	127
nLTT: an efficient summary statistic for Approximate Bayesian Computation of diversification rates from molecular phylogenies
Chapter 6	147
The role of habitat dynamics in driving diversification
