Queries and Minor Notes.

ANXIOUS TO BE A QUACK.

The following is clipped from a Chicago newspaper; the last qualification, certainly, ought to get the position desired:

SITUATION WANTED—By physician with an advertising specialist; competent to conduct correspondence, hold the chair, and good fee-taker.

COMMISSION TO OPHTHALMIC SURGEONS.

ATLANTA, GA., Sept. 14, 1900.

To the Editor:—Six years ago, when I began the practice of ophthalmology in this city, the leading optical house approached me with the proposition that if I would send to them all of my prescription work they would allow me one-third of the amount paid them by the patient on each prescription, and at the end of the month send me a check on this basis for the number of prescriptions received. I immediately declined such an offer on the grounds that it was dishonest to make the patient pay me twice; rather preferring the reduction should be made in favor of the patient at the time of purchasing the glasses. This rule I have strictly adhered to, although the opticians will not give this reduction to the purchaser, claiming that they cannot afford to have two prices for customers. This same optical house has recently told me that such a contract between oculist and optician is practiced in all the large cities, as New York and Chicago, and this, too, by the leading men in the profession. I should certainly like to know the truth of this statement and whether such practices are considered ethical.

DUNBAR ROY.

ANS.—The above query was submitted to Dr. Casey A. Wood, editor of the Ophthalmic Record, who sends the following reply:

"Dr. Dunbar Roy's query may, so far as it relates to the city of Chicago, be safely answered in the negative. It is not a common practice for the optician to pay the ophthalmic surgeon a commission on glasses furnished by him, nor would such a practice be considered ethical. I believe I am voicing the sentiment of the profession in this city when I say that such a doubtful method could not be generally practiced and be long kept a secret. A number of perfectly reputable ophthalmologists furnish glasses to their patients just as certain other physicians dispense their own drugs, and doubtless there are arguments that may be advanced in favor of this plan, but I am not acquainted with a single confrere who is willing to defend the practice of accepting commissions from the optician. If one exists, Dr. Roy's note furnishes an excellent opportunity for him to come forward and show cause for such conduct."
