Zimmerman remembers relationships built at SIUE

JOSH BOVINETTE
Alestle Reporter

As Erik Zimmerman prepares to leave SIUE with his Bachelor of Arts in philosophy, he will give one last speech at the spring 2013 commencement ceremony, representing the College of Arts and Sciences.

Each college within the university has chosen a student representative speaker to deliver a message about his or her experiences at SIUE.

Zimmerman said people might expect him to talk about his accomplishments within Student Government or his academic success, but his memories are of something far more tangible.

"It's the people," Zimmerman said. "It really is about the relationships."

According to Zimmerman, having a chance to work with people from diverse backgrounds has changed him as a person.

"I've had mentor relationships with faculty, working relationships with student governors and personal relationships with students from so many backgrounds," Zimmerman said. "I'm so lucky that this university has offered me those opportunities."

Zimmerman said he would tell incoming students they made a great choice by coming to SIUE.

"I believe SIUE is the perfect size and has an extremely vibrant atmosphere," Zimmerman said. "A student entering SIUE today has a real chance to get involved in a diverse organization that could change their life."

Kimmel Leadership Center Director Steve Sperotto said it was a pleasure to work with Zimmerman this past year.

"He has tackled a number of issues in Student Government and built a cohesive work team," Sperotto said. "He's been an

"It is amazing how Erik is able to accomplish so much and give proper attention to all of his endeavors. He never allows any organization or group to feel like second fiddle."

Zimmerman said that his speech at commencement will be an opportunity to pass what he has learned during his time at SIUE on to his classmates.

"I will talk to them about engaging creatively and about understanding that getting a degree is only the first step," Zimmerman said. "I want my classmates to be innovative and leave the university with an en-outstanding leader, following through on every project, assignment, request for information and keeping everyone updated along the way.”

According to Sperotto, Zimmerman is an example of what it means to be an SIUE student.

According to Zimmerman, students should enter SIUE ready to embrace change.

Talented Thompson defies engineering stereotypes

EVAN MEYERS
Alestle Reporter

It is a time for reflection, as well as looking forward, as many students across the country prepare to graduate.

Industrial engineering major Jessica Thompson, of Troy, said she realizes her time at SIUE has helped prepare her for the future better than any other school could have.

"I was able to do things here that I don't think I would have had a chance to do at other places," Thompson said. "SIUE is preparing students in the engineering field more than other schools are.”

With this preparation, Thompson is ready to begin the next step in her life but not before she gives one of the commencement speeches at the May 4 graduation.

"I want to talk about how lucky we are to be in this situation," Thompson said. "Engineering is such a great field, and employers are going to be impressed with our knowledge.”

Thompson was happy to be able to make a difference on the campus. She was an integral part of starting Alpha Pi Mu and Tau Beta Pi, two engineering societies at SIUE.

Engineering professor Ryan Krauss said she is not only talented in her field, but she also has great people skills.

"She has an impressive rapport with students. She has shown me she is very good at networking," Krauss said. "Her knowledge, coupled with that skill to be able to work with people, is going to lead to her being very successful.”

Thompson, looking back at her time as a student, said she was not always ready to be both a student and someone who was contributing so much outside of the classroom.

"As a freshman, I wanted to go into civil engineering, and I put a lot of pressure on myself," Thompson said. "My first semester, I was struggling a little, and it helped me realize that it was OK to not be the perfect student.”

As her time as a student went on, Thompson achieved a great deal of success. She was named the 2012 Student Laureate Award winner for SIUE by the Lincoln Academy of Illinois. The award is given to one senior from each of the 52 schools participating in the program.

Now that she is graduating, Thompson is heading into a field where women are traditionally under-represented. With this disparity in the field, Thompson will be able to serve as an example to show that gender is not a factor in how well someone can perform their job.

"Women in engineering can be hard to find; women with her talent are even more rare," Krauss said. "She has the opportunity to be a role model to younger women who think they may want to get into engineering.”

Senior industrial engineering major Jessica Thompson, of Troy, said SIUE prepared her for her life after graduation better than other universities could have: 'I was able to do things here that I don't think I would have had a chance to do at other places.' | Photo by Brian Armea/Alestle

Caraker succeeds at SIUE; plans on returning to California

ALESTLE STAFF REPORT

SIUE gave senior business administration major Kevin Caraker, of Oceanside, Calif., a chance to prove himself, and he seized the opportunity.

"I didn't take high school very seriously, and I wanted to prove to myself that I had the ability to succeed academically," Caraker said. "I used SIUE as my platform to validate myself, and SIUE gave me a platform as big as I wanted it to be."

Caraker came to SIUE thanks to a change of heart and a friend in Edwardsville. He had planned to attend film school in New York but decided it was not a realistic option at the time. Based mostly on the location of his friend, he chose to enroll at SIUE.

The change of university has not changed Caraker's long-term plans.

"I still see myself going back to California one day and having my own production company for low-budget, independent films," Caraker said.

Caraker's short-term plans are to complete his summer internship with Savvis and then open a bubble tea shop called Mr. Nice Guy. Earlier this month, he won the $2,500 second prize in The Other 40, SIUE's annual entrepreneurship competition, with his pitch for the tea shop.

Foreign language and literature professor Thomas Lavallee said speaking at graduation is an honor that Caraker deserves.

"When I look down the road at great students, I'll think about their character aspects," Lavallee said. "There are a lot of students who work hard and are very bright, but it's the aspect of caring about others and his character that will always make Kevin memorable as a great student."

Caraker's favorite memory of his time at SIUE was a study trip to China. The classmates on the trip had taken three years of Mandarin classes together and shared a desire to travel abroad, Caraker said.

"Our time abroad solidified our friendships, and we made memories that would last a lifetime," Caraker said.

Caraker's favorite memory was the opportunity to work on a multi-day project with students of a Chinese university.

"It was great just interacting with people of a different culture and with different mindsets," Caraker said.

According to Lavallee, Caraker's leadership and people skills were on display during the trip.

"I knew that he was tuned into people who were slower or tired or sick," Lavallee said. "I knew I could look at Kevin and, without even speaking, I could ask him if everyone was OK."

The trip to China solidified Caraker's relationship with Lavallee as not only a teacher, but also a friend.

"I've dealt with a lot of challenges at SIUE, and Dr. Lavallee was always there to talk to me and give me sound advice," Caraker said.

Lavallee said a good example of how Caraker's leadership and compassion extend beyond campus is Caraker's involvement with the Alliance of Students Against Poverty, something Lavallee said he does not just to add the item to his resume.

"He knows very clearly what these people are going through," Lavallee said. "It's not just something he should do; it's something he wants to do."

While at SIUE, Caraker was also involved in the Student Leadership Development Program, M3C Fellows Americorps Program and was president of Delta Sigma Pi.

"I pushed myself to succeed in the classroom, but I also became actively involved on campus," Caraker said. "I gained confidence in my abilities as a student and as a future professional."

Caraker's advice to students just beginning their studies at SIUE is to find a balance between social life and school.

"It is imperative to your success, your growth as a person to find that balance," Caraker said. "You only get one shot at this; it's important to give it your best."

Senior business administration major Kevin Caraker, of Oceanside, Calif., chose to come to SIUE to prove to himself he could succeed academically: "...SIUE gave me a platform as big as I wanted it to be."

Sams adds graduation speaker to list of accomplishments

MAC SWARTZ
Alestle Reporter

Being involved in more than 10 campus organizations is not enough for speech pathology major Cassi Sams, of East Peoria, as she adds graduation commencement speaker to the list.

"Graduation is the time between chapters, where you kind of reflect on what just happened before you leave and what is going to happen next," Sams said.

During her time at SIUE, Sams was an event chair for SIUE's Relay for Life, a desk manager in University Housing and a member of the National Student Speech Language Hearing Association, the Meridian Scholars program, Phi Eta Sigma, the Dean's Dozen for the School of Education, National Residence Hall Honorary and Undergraduate Research and Creative Activities, among others.

Sams said much of her involvement is due to her positive relationships with SIUE faculty.

"Just the faculty overall here is so amazing," Sams said. "I think they really make the experience here."

Sams has been able to balance the heavy workload of a Meridian Scholar along with a social life. Student Affairs Program Specialist Kara Shustrin said Sams is the model SIUE student.

"She's really done everything we hope every SIUE student would do," Shustrin said. "She's been able to take advantage of everything and really balance it all. Just watching her grow over the past four years has been a lot of fun."

Shustrin and Sams worked closely during the summer with a new program, The SIUE Experience, where Sams served as one of the first Cougar Guides.

"Cassi is the one who will do anything you ask," Shustrin said. "She is the first to volunteer for something."

The new orientation program for freshmen focused on helping them get connected to SIUE and learn more about SIUE's values and how they fit into that.

Shustrin used upperclassmen as group leaders where they each had a group of freshmen they worked with throughout the program.

"[Sams] was one of the first ones willing to drop in and try it even though it was brand new," Shustrin said. "We didn't really know how it was going to go. She was instrumental in helping shape that program."

Sams will take the values she has gotten from SIUE as she ventures on to graduate school at Indiana University, pursuing a master's degree in speech pathology. She will graduate with more than 30 contact hours towards her ultimate speech path certification. Most people go into graduate school with about five, Sams said.

Sams was selected as one of four people to work with the Accent Modification Clinic, where she helped a client who is not a native speaker to improve his or her pronunciation of the English language.

"Most universities don't even have accent modification at the undergrad or grad level," Sams said, "and the fact that they let us, as undergrad clinicians, have our own client is unheard of."

tion and communication disorders professor, who led the program that started this fall said from what she has seen from Sams, she will be qualified as a graduate student and ultimately a future professional.

"She should be very successful in graduate school," Brady said. "I have no concerns at all."

Sams wants to work in early intervention services with children, from birth to 3 years old, who were born with a condition that affects their communication. With her psychology minor, Sams feels that she can implement personal bonding and counseling while still applying speech pathology.
