Dear Miss Whitney:

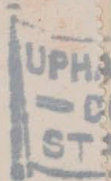

Please excuse
pencil. I have to snatch a moment to write when I can.

Mrs. Dargan had asked me to send her
a letter of introduction to Mrs. Petrick Lawrence. I did: & today
came a line from Mrs. D. acknowledging receipt of it. She says: "I have been trying to see for myself what I could do to help (the suffragists), but I haven't been quite well enough to engage actively in anything. And now that I have plunged into another play it seems important to finish it. Ten thousand dollars is quite a bait. Sometimes my rage seems so high that I feel I could go to the London Pavilion & make a speech; but, knowing that I would fall in a dead faint as soon as I should reach the platform, I go out to Highgate woods instead & talk to the trees. They
