1 The author of this book is Professor of Turkish Studies at the University of Cyprus, Nicosia and, though other parts of ‘Greater Kurdistan’ are mentioned, the work is very strongly focused on Turkey, both on events that took place there and on the work of exiles who hoped to mobilise Kurds there in the early years of the Republic. It considers the development of Kurdish nationalist discourse, as evidenced in periodicals and other publications, from the end of the 19th century to the late 1930s – a ‘failed nationalism’, according to the author.

2 Part One, entitled “‘Awakening’ the Kurds”, covers the end of the Ottoman Empire, the Great War and its aftermath and cites the periodicals Kürdistān, Ḥēvī, Rağī Kurd and Hetavē Kurd, Jīn and the publications of the Kürd Te‘āvīn ve Te rakki Cem‘īyeti. There is also a chapter on the influence of Khāni’s Memū Zīn. Part Two, “The Kurdish Question in the Turkish Republic”, mentions Azadī and Khoybūn, but concentrates more on the publications of individuals such as the Bedir Khān brothers, with illuminating remarks on their willingness to use very different arguments in different contexts, and some new observations on the so-called ‘traitor’ Şükrū Mehmed Sekbān. Part Three is particularly interesting as it discusses the attempt by Kāmurān Bedir Khān to portray the Kurdish struggle for a European audience in a German novel “The Eagle of Kurdistan” which he co-authored and which has so far been little discussed.
