

Christine Huang, “america”, AmeriQuests 13.2 (2017)

america

You are sugar and fat and cheap and rich wanting convenience without the sacrifices wanting the cheap labor and cheap cars and cheap phones and cheap food but not those behind them not those who toil and risk their lives to provide for themselves for their children for their babies the babies that those protesting outside Planned Parenthood say they care about.

I am a moth
and you drew me in with your deadly flame.
I did not know the real You.

Like biting into a red apple only to find that the inside is filled with rot.
Or like being inducted into a club fulfilling membership qualifications but knowing on the inside that you do not and cannot really belong.

the Center of the universe; all eyes on you as you make your move, like Atlas, only unaware of the true weight of the world that rests on your shoulders.

we wait.
holding our breaths as you prioritize your Imagined Community over People who are equally invisible to you.

But

there are those who see through Lady Columbia’s disguise who look forward and pray to Knowledge and Understanding and they will keep america’s true flame alive.
