Annual gifts from alumni help prepare Missouri S&T students to solve the problems of a technological world. Your contributions help make these experiences possible for current and future Rolla students.

In Bolivia, Jennifer Hoffman and 11 other S&T students installed slow sand filtration devices, a sedimentation tank and ram pumps to provide clean water to the homes of a community in need.

To learn more about ways to give, or how your gifts impact the lives of S&T students, go to giving.mst.edu or call 800-392-4112

From the editor

Megan Kean-O'Brien
Design and Production Editor

When does ordinary become extraordinary? When you combine a Missouri S&T education with a heart for making a difference.

The alumni featured in this issue of Missouri S&T Magazine have all made sacrifices in some way to make their world a better place. Whether they have given of their time, contributed their finances or swapped lucrative careers to pursue service, these everyday alumni have made the betterment of their respective communities a priority. They continually strive to improve the world by helping others achieve their dreams and goals — even when that dream is as basic as having clean water. In doing so, these alumni have become extraordinary. They have become S&T's "everyday heroes."

As you may have noticed, a special publication was mailed with this issue of the magazine. That publication, Alumni of Influence, was 140 years in the making. In it, we feature more inspirational stories. We hope that you will see the book as a testament to the excellence our institution is known for and the outstanding work of our alumni who have helped change and shape our world.

That is perhaps the number one thing I love about this university — its ability to transform individuals. For the last five years, I have heard story after story from students and alumni alike of how S&T has changed them; by giving students the tools for success, inspiring them to reach their individual potential, and turning dreams into reality, thereby allowing graduates to leave their mark on the world.

With this issue of the magazine, I am fulfilling one of my lifelong dreams — becoming an editor. If only my high school English teacher could see me now! But I do owe my dad an overwhelming debt of gratitude for seeing the potential in me and constantly pushing me to be a better writer (rest in peace, Red Pen). I take over for Joann Stiritz, who not only served as the design and production editor for the last four years, but as my mentor as well. I certainly have big shoes to fill, but I hope to continue to make this award-winning magazine the Best Ever. We wish Joann all the best as she joins the civil, architectural and environmental engineering department. We're fortunate to retain her talents within the university family.

Meet Megan

Here are a few facts about your new design and production editor:

- Soon will be an S&T alum. Megan plans to graduate in May with her master's degree in technical communication.
- Moved to Rolla a little more than five years ago from Sioux Falls, S.D.
- Selected to be part of UCDA's national "40 Designers Project."
- We're still holding out hope to "convert" Megan to cheer for the St. Louis Cardinals. As a new mom, she and her husband named their daughter, Brooklyn, after the Dodgers. But she does cheer for the Blues, so we'll give her that.
- And if school and a baby don't keep her busy enough, she also has two dogs, too.
- Megan has perhaps one of the most diverse music collections in the office, but you wouldn't know that if you stopped by between Thanksgiving and New Year's — Christmas music only.
- Ask her anything about reality TV or celebrity gossip. We dare you.

LaWanda Jones: Meeting the challenge

As a student, she handled a rigorous engineering curriculum. As an engineer who progressed into the marketing field, she prevailed over a different set of challenges. And today, as the first female to chair the Chancellor's Advisory Committee on African American Recruitment and Retention (CACAARR) at S&T, she readily accepts a new challenge: to help S&T recruit a more diverse student body.

"There's no doubt an urgency for more technical minds needed to resolve our nation's most pressing issues," says Jones, the corporate marketing manager for ABNA Engineering. "As our population continues to experience a diverse shift, we must do all we can to prepare the next generations with educational opportunities to equip our society with leaders in technical careers."

This past spring, Jones began her term as chair of CACAARR, following Gregory Skannal, GeoE'85, who serves on the alumni association board. The committee, made up of alumni volunteers, advises the chancellor's office on matters related to African American recruitment. Established in the mid-1980s in response to concerns related to campus diversity, early members created a lasting platform and generated a series of scholarships for African-American students. And it's making a difference. Minority enrollment has nearly doubled since 2000.

To build on this foundation, Jones encourages her fellow alumni to support a new challenge, presented by Maj. Gen. Joe N. Ballard, MS EMgt'72. Recently, Ballard and his wife, Tessie, donated $250,000 to create the Ballard Challenge to support more minority students at S&T. A portion of these funds is dedicated to providing $5,000 matches to encourage other alumni to endow scholarships of their own.

"Through this challenge, we have a unique opportunity to create a legacy which will empower African American talent for years to come," Jones says.

For more information about the Ballard Challenge, contact Greg Harris in Missouri S&T's development office at 800-392-4112 or email gfarris@mst.edu.

Say What?

“There is a new emphasis on this feminine ideal of beauty that’s emerging in the flapper figure ... this rail thin, flat-chested, small-hipped, almost boyish figure that becomes really the new ideal of feminine beauty during the 1920s.”

— Patrick J. Huber, associate professor of history and political science, discussing the 1920s exercise recordings of Wallace Rogerson during a September 2011 episode of the PBS program “History Detectives.”

“Changing the name of an institution is never easy, but Missouri S&T has provided a model for how to do it successfully.”

— Henry Petroski, the Aleksander S. Vesic Professor of Civil Engineering and professor of history at Duke University, in the October 2011 issue of ASEE Prism.

“Almost any kid that’s interested in science is interested in space science. So it’s a pretty easy sell.”

— Bill Pabst, state 4-H youth expert with University of Missouri Extension office, discussing Missouri S&T’s Aerospace Camp on St. Louis NBC affiliate KSDK.

“The reason to come to college is to learn. The reason to come to S&T is to learn a lot — to incomparably prepare you for your professional life.”

— Selin Acar, a senior in chemistry and president of the Missouri S&T Student Council, during her convocation speech to incoming freshmen.

Relief and Rebuilding IN JOPLIN

by Mindy Limback, limbackm@mst.edu

The night started as one of celebration, as more than 450 seniors received their diplomas from Joplin High School on May 22. A light rain interrupted snapshots of new graduates and forced them to leave the open lawn of Missouri Southern State University for the shelter of their cars. Moments later, the day's joy and happiness turned into chaos as a deadly EF-5 twister ripped through the southwestern Missouri town.

Randy Ganz, CE'78, president and CEO of Dewitt & Associates in Springfield, Mo., was at his son's house in Iowa when his phone "lit up like crazy." Hearing about the devastation, he quickly worked with his senior project managers to gather a team and supplies — truckloads of plywood lumber, light-stand generators, and "anything that we thought we'd need that night."

Communications were down to next to nothing. "People didn't understand the real magnitude," Ganz says.

Mercy-St. John's Regional Medical Center, a nine-story building, took a direct hit, blowing out windows, tossing gurneys and mangling cars. Just a half mile away, Freeman Health Systems had lost part of its roof but was still functioning despite the pouring rain.

"We worked to get the roof under control, but we had several of our people doing nothing but transporting and carrying the injured to areas to receive emergency care," Ganz says. "This literally went on for hours as vehicles bringing the injured were lined up three blocks long. As darkness approached, the only lights visible for miles were from the generators at Freeman and the light towers that we had brought to the site."

The rising sun on Monday morning revealed the full extent of the twister's wrath. One-third of the town was gone. With the light of dawn came a call for help from Mercy-St. John's. Ganz and his team responded, securing sensitive information and equipment and placing 8,000 feet of fencing around the entire hospital.

Monday also brought with it hundreds of volunteers from around the state, including S&T freshman Sean Brady and his father, Ric, of Camdenton, Mo. The destruction they saw along Rangeline Road, Joplin's main drag, was indescribable.

The pair unloaded their Bobcat and got to work — turning cars right-side up, removing trees and debris, and even locating an elderly man's medication and money from underneath a massive pile of rubble. "I will never be the same," Sean Brady says of the experience.

While Brady and his dad were moving rubble, others from Missouri S&T were on their way to Joplin, bringing supplies like water and juice to the Red Cross. Among them were Haitham Shtaieh, who works for Chartwells, the university's food service provider, and Mohammed Debree of Libya, a graduate student in engineering management.

After their first trip, the volunteer team grew to include members of the newly formed Islamic Help of North America (IHNA), which assists people who are in need, and S&T's Muslim Student Association. The now 10-member group returned to Joplin that Wednesday with more supplies.

"We have had up to 20 volunteers — mostly students from Rolla, Kansas City and St. Louis," says Ranga Voona of India, a graduate student in mechanical engineering. "Thanks to the efforts of many generous and hard-working volunteers and non-profit organizations involved, some fast-paced work is going on in Joplin. We all hope it gets back to normal as soon as possible."

FIERCE TORNADOES

In another part of the state, Richard T. Bradley, CE’88, dealt with another tornado, the one that hit St. Louis on Good Friday, April 22, 2011, just weeks before the disaster in Joplin.

“The damage at Lambert-St. Louis International Airport was shocking to see on TV, but nothing close to what I saw when I got out there,” says Bradley, president of the St. Louis Board of Public Service, the city’s chief engineer, and the airport’s former assistant director of planning and engineering. “It was like a scene out of a movie that you just couldn’t imagine was real. I’m still amazed that there were only a few minor injuries.”

With power off, water coming in throughout the building and significant structural damage, Bradley led a preliminary detailed damage assessment of the facility and mobilized city and airport staff, contractors and consultants to begin immediate cleanup and repairs to get the airport in order and reopened.

Bradley credits his training for helping guide him through the process. “Engineering teaches you the principles, but it also teaches you to think on your feet and make the best possible decision you can for the situation you are given,” he says.

(Top) Crews inspect damage to the roof of Concourse C at Lambert-St. Louis International Airport Saturday, April 23. The airport reopened two days after a strong tornado caused significant damage. The airport director says one American Airlines 757 jet sustained significant damage, and four other American planes had minor damage.

Into the danger zone

by Lance Feyh, lfeyh@mst.edu

Recently, while deployed in Joplin, Mo., Steve Winters, PetE'83, was reminded of Sept. 11, 2001. "After the tornado," he says, "the smell of wet concrete dust brought an immediate flashback to the smells in New York."

By day, Winters is the associate director for student information systems at the University of Missouri-Columbia. But he's also a volunteer with Missouri Task Force 1. Managed by the Boone County Fire Protection District, Missouri Task Force 1 is part of the Federal Emergency Management Agency's Urban Search and Rescue Response System.

The task force uses the skills of people who have expertise in various areas. In addition to using his technical talents to operate "electronic victim detection devices," Winters leads a small team with canine search capabilities.

Winters first heard about Missouri Task Force 1 in 1998 during a presentation at a local meeting of the Optimist Club. He applied and was accepted in 1999.

"FEMA received presidential orders and activated MO-TF1 around noon on Sept. 11, 2001," Winters says. "We traveled by school bus to Whiteman Air Force Base for in-processing. ... We were loaded and flown out of Whiteman in the late evening of Sept. 11 on three National Guard C-130 aircraft."

After arriving at McGuire Air Force Base in New Jersey in the early morning, the team was moved into Manhattan. According to Winters, MO-TF1 had boots on the ground at Ground Zero in the afternoon of Sept. 12.

The task force worked continuous 12-hour shifts for the next nine days. Sadly, the last live victim rescued from the rubble in New York was found around 12:30 p.m. on Sept. 12. But Winters and Missouri Task Force 1 aided in the detection, location and recovery of bodies.

In addition to being deployed to New York in the wake of 9/11 and to Joplin following the recent tornado, Winters also spent 16 days in New Orleans after Hurricane Katrina struck in 2005.

At Lambert Airport, the tornado touched down, spewing debris over the airfield, bursting glass in the concourse and damaging cars atop a parking garage. Two days following the tornado, once the power was restored, the airport was operating at 70 percent capacity. Some flights had to be diverted away from St. Louis when the storm hit. Managing mosquitoes by Lance Feyh, lfeyh@mst.edu

Six years ago, after he retired, Jerry Sellers, ME'69, got into the mosquito business. "I needed something to occupy my time," says the president and owner of MosquitoZone.

With his wife, Maura, Sellers started the business that caters to industries that deploy workers to places where malaria and other diseases and hazards are common, such as Africa (particularly in Chad) and New Guinea.

MosquitoZone goes to these developing countries to scout potential hazards and then establish procedures for protecting people who will be (or already are) working on a particular site. A team of entomologists is employed to study mosquitoes and "vector-borne tropical diseases," which are transmitted by insects. The company also provides advice about avoiding snakebites and poisonous plants.

Before starting MosquitoZone with his wife, Sellers worked for Conoco for 13 years and then did software work. He ended up getting involved in the mosquito field by accident because "no one else was doing it."

The company has many clients in the oil and gas business, as well as government agencies. In addition to helping prevent diseases and possible fatalities, MosquitoZone tries to ensure decreases in lost worker productivity.

Sellers and his wife live in Houston, where MosquitoZone is based.

ANSWERING THE CALL

by Mindy Limback, limbackm@mst.edu

The peace and quiet is broken by emergency sirens. Soon the distant thump of a medical helicopter gets louder. In communities across West Tennessee, paramedics arrive on the scene and administer life-saving care taught by Gerald Foon, ME'74.

For nearly 40 years, Foon has taught more than 1,000 paramedics and emergency medical technicians (EMTs) at Southwest Tennessee Community College, formerly known as Shelby State Community College in Memphis.

"I was fortunate to get in on the ground floor of a new profession," he says. Prior to the 1970s, emergency medical transportation was often provided by funeral homes, with little or no medical care being administered.

After receiving his engineering degree from Rolla, Foon moved to Tennessee and enrolled in Southwest, which was offering the state's first paramedic program. After finishing his courses in 1975, he was asked to join the college's faculty. In addition to teaching, Foon worked as a flight paramedic with the Memphis Police Department Helicopter Aviation Unit until 1984.

Currently an associate professor at Southwest, Foon previously served as chair of the college's emergency medical technology department from 1978 to 1998. Under his leadership, the paramedic program became the first in the state and the 14th in the country to receive national accreditation from the Committee on Accreditation of Allied Health Education Programs.

The Tennessee Emergency Medical Services Education Association recognized Foon with a lifetime achievement award in 2004.

"My calling in life was not to be an engineer, but what I learned at Rolla helped me understand the treatments, new technology and procedures needed to teach my paramedics how to save a human life," he says.

ANTIBIOTICS

Society's widespread use of antibiotics often causes bacteria to genetically mutate to survive, creating antibiotic-resistant bacteria that can be deadly. But decades of research by James Knox, Chem'63, has given pharmaceutical companies vital tools to help them design new antibiotics or re-engineer old ones these resistant bacteria can't elude.

James Knox with a background image of penicillinase, the bacterial enzyme he and his lab mapped from X-ray data.

A professor emeritus of molecular and cell biology at the University of Connecticut, Knox has spent his career illuminating these microscopic enemies. In the 1980s and '90s, the research he conducted in the X-ray diffraction laboratory at the university's Institute of Materials Science was the first to show penicillin bound to its bacterial target enzyme. His research was also the first to establish the molecular structure of other enzymes that provide penicillin and vancomycin-type antibiotic resistance.

Knox says investigations were published in the journal Science and were covered by major news organizations. They led to more than 100 invitations to speak around the world.

Knox says his molecular images continue to be used by pharmaceutical and academic scientists to understand antibiotic action and mutational changes, and to design new antibiotics.

"In the old days, it was trial and error — just testing whether a chemical killed the bacteria or not," Knox says.

"Now we can get an atomic-level picture of the enzymes' molecular structure, then the drugs can be rationally designed to interact with them."

His archived X-ray data and enzyme structure images are available for free from the Protein Data Bank. "They'll still be there in 100 years," he says. "As their methods of analysis grow, scientists and chemists will have new ways of using our basic data in their design of future antibiotics."

D-DAY

A SURVIVOR'S STORY

by Lance Feyh, lfeyh@mst.edu

When he eventually made it out of the danger zone that day, John Allen went looking for a British ship — because they had the good scotch. Like many in his generation, he's reluctant to talk about it. The last thing Allen wants to do is make a big deal about his role in the invasion. "I just happened to be one of the guys who lived through it," he says.

He's referring to Normandy, of course. D-Day. On the morning of June 6, 1944, Allen, GGph'42, MinE'47, was in one of the first boats to reach the coast. His job was to help place charges that were designed to blow up the underwater barriers the Germans had rigged along the shoreline. If Allen and the other demolitions guys were successful, the allied forces still out in the channel would have a much easier time making land. With the beach in sight, Allen and his crew waded the remaining distance. Apart from the explosives they were carrying, he doesn't remember for sure if they were even armed. "We had one job to do," he says.

Meanwhile, Air Force planes had been relentlessly targeting the Germans, who were up on the cliffs; and, for a while, it looked like things might go really well. But, as things turned out, there would be plenty of resistance, lots of artillery raining down.

In the most dangerous of situations, Allen and his explosives partners, 10 of them, did their job that Tuesday morning. They placed their charges and helped clear the way for the allies to reach the beaches of Normandy. Eight of the 10 people Allen was working with were wounded or killed in the process.

After the war, Allen came back to Rolla on the G.I. Bill. He already had one degree — this was where he got his explosives experience in the first place. But he had met a "Rolla girl," so he pursued a second degree in mining engineering. With that diploma in hand and a new wife, Helen "Chili," Allen went back to the mines for a while and then returned to military life. He became a career officer in the Navy, putting in more than 20 years.

Stationed for a time at Pearl Harbor, Allen was the resident officer in charge of the construction of the Arizona Memorial. As is the military custom, the family went from assignment to assignment and place to place, including Turkey, where Allen helped build-up post-war facilities.

After retiring from the Navy as a commander, Allen took a position with an architectural engineering firm based in Los Angeles, directing overseas contracts in 17 countries.

Eventually, Allen and his wife came back to Rolla for good. Now in his 90s, Allen is into aquaculture (fish farming) and alternative sources of energy (he's been studying liquid fluoride thorium reactors). He follows what's happening on campus. And he still enjoys a good scotch.

Allen doesn't mind talking about the places he's been and ideas that continue to intrigue him. In fact, he enjoys the conversation. But he wants you to know that he didn't do anything special on that day off the coast of France, that he was one small part of a very big effort. Getting this point across is very important to him. "I just happened to live through it," he insists.

"I just happened to live through it."

More than just a war

by Mindy Limback, limbackm@mst.edu

Maj. Dennis Sugrue, GeoE'04, learned an important lesson during his time in Afghanistan — engineering projects can solve social problems, but only if they maintain a community's social balance.

Sugrue deployed in January 2006 with the 3rd Brigade Combat Team, 10th Mountain Division, for a 16-month tour in Afghanistan to establish relationships with the people living in the country's rugged and mountainous northeastern region.

"As remote as it was, they had common concerns with water, electricity and roads," Sugrue says.

A few of the villages sat on the "hair-raising" main road, bordered by cliffs on one side and a raging river on the other.

"We would assess and prioritize village needs by working closely with their leaders," Sugrue explains. During his time in Afghanistan, he worked on several water distribution projects, micro-hydro power generators and road improvement projects.

Today Sugrue is an environmental engineering instructor at West Point, where he teaches seniors how their engineering projects are really solutions to social problems.

"It's important to not disrupt the social balance in these complex societies," he says. "Sometimes we do more harm than good in trying to address their problems. If that becomes the case, you probably haven't bettered the situation."

BUILDING HOPE

Greg Wayne, EE'79, co-founded an organization that provides home repair for those in need.

Before there was “Extreme Makeover” on national television, the Kansas City area had HopeBUILDERS Home Repair, a volunteer organization that does everything from changing light bulbs to installing wheelchair ramps to whole-house rehabilitations. The group, co-founded by Greg Wayne, EE’79, started as an outreach ministry of a collection of churches in 2000. Volunteers do most of their work on Saturdays.

“Thousands of volunteer hours have been donated to help hundreds of homeowners stay in their homes longer and live more comfortably,” says Wayne, who now serves as operations director. “Many of the homes we work on have dilapidated porches, steps, windows and doors, and are badly in need of weatherization measures.”

Wayne points to the case of an 80-year-old mother living with a daughter who has a chronic disease. The daughter had fallen in the tub of their bathroom. HopeBUILDERS did a complete bathroom remodel for them. “I am always amazed when we first visit a client, and they’re surprised that we even showed up,” Wayne says. “They seem to be conditioned to being ignored or forgotten. I am moved when clients start crying as we finish a project, overwhelmed with gratitude.”

According to Wayne, the homeowners have often been cited by county code enforcement authorities because they are unable to correct the dilapidated conditions — physically or financially. HopeBUILDERS works with the authorities to address the issues.

Today, the group draws volunteers from area churches, community groups, corporations and professional organizations. They serve the four-county Kansas City metro area.

“The well-rounded education I got at Rolla has opened many doors for me, including my present professional function as a project manager of major projects and serving the community in a similar capacity to lead this organization,” says Wayne, who works for Black & Veatch’s energy division.

Black gold, green Gulf

by Lance Feyh, lfeyh@mst.edu

“We have some world-class tools in place to alert us if we are out of compliance and are always looking for new and improved ways to keep the Gulf safe.”

— John Hoffman, MinE'80

In 2007, two years after Hurricane Katrina hit New Orleans and three years before the Deepwater Horizon oil spill in the Gulf of Mexico, John Hoffman started Black Elk Energy, an oil company that strives to be eco-friendly.

Prior to starting Black Elk, Hoffman worked for Amoco Production Co. and other energy companies. “Black Elk stringently assesses technical information to protect against potential risks as part of our acquisition strategy,” Hoffman recently told Rigzone, an industry news organization. “Our approach extends the economic life of fields and delivers a greater volume of reserves to the U.S. energy market. ... We have some world-class tools in place to alert us if we are out of compliance and are always looking for new and improved ways to keep the Gulf safe.”

Hoffman, MinE'80, has also started “Save the Blue,” an initiative to protect and preserve ecosystems in the Gulf. As part of this initiative, he has met with members of Congress to discuss bills that would protect the reef ecosystems that form on offshore oil and gas platforms. “It’s been documented that each platform has 10,000 to 30,000 fish and mammals that use the ecosystem as a habitat,” says Hoffman, who is an avid scuba diver. “Is it right that we should destroy these ecosystems?”

“I would say that the Gulf of Mexico is one of the few places on earth where the health of the environment is so obviously linked to the community and economy.”

In 2004, Jerry Rich, EE'74, took early retirement from a 30-year career as an electrical engineer with Eastman Chemical Co. and went back to school to become a teacher. After a couple of prerequisite courses at a local technical college, Rich entered a “career changers” program at the University of South Carolina. His first year of teaching was 2006.

“This is my sixth year of teaching fourth grade at White Knoll Elementary,” Rich says. “I teach math and science and like to think that I am training future engineers.”

Before Rich retired from engineering, his sister lent him a book by Bob Buford titled Halftime: Changing Your Game Plan from Success to Significance.

“I read the book and realized that, in the eyes of many people, I had probably been fairly successful,” Rich says. “But was I really significant in the lives of others? After a couple of years of contemplation, the opportunity to make a change led me to pursue a teaching career.”

Teaching is in Rich’s blood. Both of his parents were longtime teachers. His mother began her career in a one-room country school that housed eight grades. In high school, Rich took a science class his dad taught.

Rich prefers to teach elementary grades — a time, he believes, before disciplinary problems keep kids from learning.

“I decided that younger students have not yet learned how to misbehave, and maybe that is where I belonged,” Rich says.

In his spare time, Rich runs — a lot. Later this year he plans to run the Kiawah Island Marathon in South Carolina. It will be his 52nd.

“A friend of mine told me that when you turn 40, your body begins to fall apart,” Rich says. “I refused to believe that and decided to do my best to prevent it. So far, I have run 51 marathons. One in each state and one in Washington, D.C.”

All that running seemed like a natural progression for Rich.

“In 1993, I took a little trip around 48 states and managed to go inside all the state capitol buildings as well as Washington, D.C.,” Rich says. It was a 15,000-mile journey that took a month to complete.

“Years later, the idea of running a marathon in each state seemed to be a natural (at least to me) follow-up,” he says. “I made sure to visit the capitol buildings when I ran my Juneau, Alaska, and Honolulu, Hawaii, marathons.”

Jerry Rich, EE'74, in his classroom.

Both running and teaching help Rich find significance in his life.

“The most rewarding part of teaching,” Rich says, “is when a struggling fourth grader looks up at me after a one-on-one math session, smiles, and says, ‘Oh, now I get it.’”

When he began his quest for significance, Rich set a goal of teaching for five years. At the end of that five, he decided he could survive five more years.

“I guess that gives me four more years to determine my next career,” Rich says. “Real retirement, whatever that is, is probably not one of the options. Fourth graders help you stay young.”

Minor league summers

by Lance Feyh, lfeyh@mst.edu

A big fan of St. Louis Cardinals baseball, Helene Hardy Pierce, EMgt'83, was very excited when, after moving to New Jersey, she found out the Cardinals had a Single-A Short Season team that played at a minor league stadium 10 minutes from her home. During the first game she attended with her husband in 2002, the team announced over the public address system that it was still looking for host families. "We called, and a day later, three guys moved in," Pierce recalls. "The following year, there were four players."

Pierce and her husband, Riley, hosted players for nine summers. This is the first year without a local team, but Pierce thinks a new one will come to the area in 2012.

"More than 50 players stayed in our home during that time," says Pierce, who is vice president of technical services, codes and industry relations for GAF, a large roofing manufacturer. "The team knew we were flexible. New players would often just show up at our house until their own host family arrangements could be made." One player from the Dominican Republic even moved his wife and their two young children into the home for three weeks.

Although major league players make huge salaries, and high draft picks get big bonuses, most minor leaguers exist on meager wages. Odds are they'll never make it to "The Show" (Major League Baseball). Pierce and her husband never charged their guests rent, and they kept the pantry full.

Pierce cooked on Saturdays and Sundays, when the team was in town. Word got out that she knew how to barbecue a brisket, or bake lasagna, pies, cakes and cookies — and "extra guys" were liable to show up.

"It was actually a match made in heaven because I could also bake and they devoured anything I made," Pierce says.

One of the players who showed up at the house was Brendan Ryan, who played for the St. Louis Cardinals from 2007-2010 before moving on to the Seattle Mariners. "He was a very nice young man," Pierce says. "Many who played with him are still happy that he made it because he was never an ego guy."

"Everyone who lived in our home was gracious and kind, realizing that we had opened it to them, and they respected that," says Pierce. "And over the years, we've stayed in contact with many of 'our' players. Out of the clear blue, we'll get a phone call or text message, just to say hello."

The 2008 Sussex Skyhawks (far left) pose for a team photo on their home field at Skylands Park in Augusta, N.J. The Skyhawks, a St. Louis Cardinals affiliate, was part of the independent minor baseball league Canadian-American Association of Professional Baseball (Can-Am League). The franchise ceased operations after the 2010 season when the team's lease on Skylands Park ended. This was the first time in 10 years without a local team in the area, but hopes are high that a team will return to the area for the 2012 season. (Center) Helene Hardy Pierce, EMgt'83, poses with minor league baseball player Candido "Candy" Martinez in this 2006 photo taken just after the season ended. Pierce has remained in contact with many of the players she has housed. She and her husband often refer to those players as "our" players. She has collected a multitude of memorabilia from over the years, including a collection of signed baseballs, bats, helmets and bobble heads.

ENGINEERING WITH A MISSION

by Mary Helen Stoltz, mhstoltz@mst.edu

Sarah Young is on a mission from God. Young, CE'94, is a project developer for Engineering Ministries International (EMI), a non-profit Christian development organization that serves the poorest of the poor in developing countries. Since its founding in 1982, EMI has worked on more than 800 relief and development projects in 80 countries.

This past fall, Young began her 25th project with EMI — leading a team of volunteers from the United States, India and Singapore to North India to begin designing plans for a seminary that will eventually house 300 students. While she was there, she followed up on a 2010 project — improvements to a water system for a school that serves disadvantaged children.

“I also visited a WASH Program (WATER, Sanitation and Hygiene) I helped start back in 2007,” Young says. The program has helped provide wells and toilets for families in 20 villages.

“That has been my favorite project,” Young says. “My dream all along has been to help people in North India get access to clean water and sanitation.”

EMI works with thousands of volunteers around the world with a staff of around 40 professionals. As one of those staff members, Young is responsible for raising support to pay her own salary.

“My employer is not only EMI, but also about 40 families, individuals and churches who care about the work that I’m doing and want me to give from my skills to help those in need,” Young says. “I spend quite a bit of time communicating with those who support me, not just to report on the work, but to build our relationships.

“It’s like being part of a big family,” Young says of working for EMI. “Since we are a faith-based organization, we are concerned about the development of people, so that they can live in a way that glorifies God in their work, families and personal lives.”

SOCIAL JUSTICE

by Andrew Careaga, acareaga@mst.edu

networker

When he was president of the Student Council at S&T, Andrew Sears, EE'95, leveraged technology to connect student governments all over the country by forming the National Student Government Internet Headquarters, an online resource for information exchange. Today, Sears is still using the Internet to connect people — but on a greater scale, and for a greater purpose.

“If the Internet can be used to connect millions of buyers and sellers, then why can’t it be used to connect the resources of the world to help the poor?”

— Andrew Sears, EE'95

As the executive director of TechMission, a Boston-based non-profit, Sears connects thousands of volunteers and interns with social service projects across the nation. The organization also operates City Vision College, which offers online courses and bachelor's degrees in urban ministry, addiction studies and nonprofit management.

By harnessing the power of the Internet, Sears hopes to tap into “the largest social network in the world” — 2 billion Christians — to help eradicate poverty.

“If the Internet can be used to connect millions of buyers and sellers,” says Sears, “then why can’t it be used to connect the resources of the world to help the poor?”

Merging technology with spiritual matters is a passion for Sears, who approaches social justice issues with an entrepreneurial flair. He founded TechMission in 2000 with its first program, the Association of Christian Community Computer Centers, or AC4. Through AC4, Sears focused on trying to bridge the so-called “digital divide” between the technological haves and have-nots. The organization provided computers and training for hundreds of Christian community centers, mostly in urban settings.

Through that experience, Sears discovered deep-seated issues that computer hardware alone could not solve. “There’s a more fundamental educational gap beyond the digital divide,” he says. “If people can’t read, they’re not going to be able to use a computer.”

That’s when he set about using technology for “connecting people with the poor,” in the words of TechMission’s tagline.

Last year, Sears’ organization connected 13,630 volunteers with more than 5,000 ministries and social service agencies through a volunteer-matching website called ChristianVolunteering.org and TechMission Corps, which is an AmeriCorps urban internship program.

But by combining his passions for technology and service to the poor, Sears discovered his true mission.

— 10 YEARS LATER —

History will look at the 10 years since the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11, 2001, as a period of “breathtaking American ignorance” on the part of the nation’s leaders, offset by tremendous adaptability among U.S. military personnel, says John C. McManus, a military historian at Missouri S&T.

“From the broader view, the same Wahabbi-oriented terrorists who attacked on 9/11 were actually at war with the United States long before that terrible day,” says McManus, an associate professor of history and political science at S&T.

He says the struggle dates from the early 1970s when Islamic terrorists began to hijack planes.

SEPT. 11, 2001, WAS JUST THE WAKE-UP CALL.

— John C. McManus

“For 25-plus years there were incidents of varying seriousness, from the bombing of the Marine barracks in Lebanon in 1983 to the Achille Lauro to the 1993 World Trade Center bombing,” McManus says. For most of that time, the United States was fixated on the Cold War or the erroneous belief in the 1990s that the post-Cold War world was no longer dangerous. Sept. 11, 2001, was just the wake-up call.

McManus says the events of 9/11 led — directly or indirectly — to two protracted wars that demonstrate the limits of American power and technology. They also show that most wars tend to devolve into insurgencies, particularly in an age of superpowers.

“Napoleon learned this in Spain and Russia,” McManus says. “In our Civil War, the North may have won the conventional struggle but it lost the guerrilla struggle we now call Reconstruction. The ‘weaker’ side can always find a way to fight back, provided the will is there.

“I think future historians will marvel at the breathtaking American ignorance on the cusp of both 21st century wars, along with the equally breathtaking ability to adapt, innovate and succeed on the part of our military personnel,” McManus says.

“Churchill once said of the fighter pilots who won the Battle of Britain: ‘Never was so much owed by so many to so few.’ I think the same should be said about those very few Americans who have served in Afghanistan and Iraq. They comprise a tiny portion of our population, yet they have assumed an incredible burden and they have achieved varying levels of success. I personally believe that, without them, we would have been attacked repeatedly in the last decade.”

A member of the Missouri S&T faculty since 2000, McManus is one of the nation’s leading experts on the history of Americans in combat. His latest book, Grunts: Inside the American Infantry Combat Experience, World War II through Iraq, illustrates how American troops on the ground, the “grunts,” have proven to be the crucial difference between victory and defeat despite the U.S. military’s reliance on technology in modern warfare.

S&T students held a candlelight vigil at the Havener Center to commemorate the 10th anniversary of 9/11.

Engineering diversity

Since 2000, Missouri S&T's minority science, technology, engineering and mathematics (STEM) enrollment has increased by 124 percent and female enrollment has increased by 53 percent. A new program established by Ameren aims to raise those figures even higher.

The Ameren Diversity in Engineering Scholarship Program will draw female and underrepresented minority students with financial need into engineering and computer science fields.

"A partner with Missouri S&T for many years, Ameren understands the importance of developing a diverse workforce by creating opportunities for a range of young people interested in pursuing engineering and computer science careers, particularly those who have historically been underrepresented in these fields," says Thomas R. Voss, EE'69, president and CEO of Ameren. "Missouri S&T is the perfect partner to help us create a more diversified engineering workforce."

The Ameren gift will also create a professional development program that will match scholarship recipients with corporate mentors who will provide guidance to the students in their academic careers. The program shows the importance of building diversity in engineering and computer science fields.

A recent study by the American Society for Engineering Education and The Chronicle of Higher Education found that minority college students represent the only student growth market in the next 20 years, but of all U.S. engineering students, fewer than 6 percent are African-American, 8.1 percent are Hispanic and about 2 percent are Native Americans or Hawaiian Pacific Islanders.

The study also found that while 57 percent of all U.S. college students are female, fewer than 18 percent of engineering students are female. S&T's average is slightly higher at 22.4 percent.

Top corporate partners

Missouri S&T benefits from partnerships with many corporations. But there are a select few companies whose connection with the campus is unrivaled. These are the companies that hire our graduates, invest in the university and support research. Their employees are active on campus, and Missouri S&T often provides continuing education to their workforce.

Recently, Missouri S&T's Corporate Relations Team, made up of senior campus leaders, selected S&T's 2011-2012 top corporate partners based on three years of data on four criteria: hiring, donations to campus, research expenditures and number of alumni employed.

Twelve companies top the list:

Ameren
Anheuser-Busch
The Boeing Co.
Caterpillar
Chevron
Deere & Co.
ExxonMobil
General Electric
General Motors
Halliburton
Monsanto
Sprint Nextel

S&T appreciates all these companies do and is glad to provide great services to them. To find out more about what S&T can do for your company, contact Mary Bird at 573-341-6596 or mbird@mst.edu.

For more information about our corporate partners, see page 90.

Sharing the vision: Liou and Midha

On Sept. 1, Frank Liou, professor of mechanical and aerospace engineering, became the Michael and Joyce Bytnar Professor of Product Innovation and Creativity. On the same day, Ashok Midha, professor and former chair of mechanical and aerospace engineering, became director of the Missouri S&T Product Innovation and Creativity Center (PICC). The pair will work closely to integrate product design and innovation into the department's curriculum.

It's a vision that's shared by Michael, ME'68, and Joyce Bytnar of St. Louis. Michael Bytnar is a retired president of Nooter Corp. of St. Louis. The Bytnars provided funding for the two S&T positions.

"The Bytnar Professorship is a unique opportunity to extend the department's vision for design education and to further establish the Missouri S&T program as a national leader in mechanical engineering design education," says Warren K. Wray, interim chancellor. "Dr. Liou has extensive design experience, and this position will allow him to further focus the department's efforts."

Liou, who also serves as director of the interdisciplinary manufacturing engineering program, will implement the department's design philosophy throughout the mechanical engineering curriculum and the design content courses, teaching graduate and undergraduate courses, and evaluating the department's design education to bring national recognition to the campus. He will also work closely with Midha.

Located largely at the center of Toomey Hall, Missouri S&T's mechanical and aerospace engineering complex, the PICC gives students a place to enhance their leadership, teamwork and communications skills while tackling real-world, hands-on design engineering projects, Midha says. The center houses a presentation hub, design studio, prototyping loft, CNC machining center, conference room, rapid prototyping lab, multimedia conference and presentation room, fabrication corner, student machine shop, and an office for the department's graduate teaching assistants.

"The PICC is a vital link in the educational process of Missouri S&T's mechanical and aerospace engineering students, providing our graduates with the confidence and skills necessary to succeed in private industry," says Wray. "Dr. Midha's longtime service as chair of the department, and his leadership and vision in the area of design education, makes him an ideal candidate to lead this facility."

The Product Innovation and Creativity Center gives students practical, hands-on design experience.

S&T welcomes new Jones Chair

Kamal H. Khayat is the new Vernon and Maralee Jones Chair of Civil Engineering. Khayat was also named director of the Center for Infrastructure Engineering Studies and the Center for Transportation Infrastructure and Safety at Missouri S&T.

Khayat specializes in the development of high-performance cement-based materials for structural applications and rehabilitation projects. He focuses on self-consolidating concrete and high-performance concrete behavior.

Khayat earned his Ph.D. in civil engineering from the University of California at Berkeley. Prior to arriving at S&T this fall, Khayat was director of the Center of Excellence on Concrete Infrastructure Engineering at the Universite de Sherbrooke in Canada. He was also head of the Integrated Research Laboratory on Materials Valorization and Innovative and Durable Structures at Sherbrooke.

Vernon, CE'53, and Maralee Jones endowed the chair in 2006 after making numerous contributions to Missouri S&T. Vernon Jones is the former president of Williams, an energy and communications conglomerate in Tulsa, Okla.

Missouri S&T honored the community's cultural diversity with Chinese dragons, dancers, traditional food and crafts, and camels during the 2011 Celebration of Nations.

Helping East Africa

Dan Oerther wants to help East Africans help themselves. He is working to bring clean water, food and income to an area that is suffering from the worst drought in decades.

As the John and Susan Mathes Chair of Environmental Engineering at S&T, Oerther has spent the last five years with his wife, Sarah, a registered nurse, working on projects to benefit the area.

“We’ve been working with the Luo tribe in Tanzania and are now starting projects with the same tribe in Kenya,” he says.

The Oerthers completed a water project in Kenya and returned to the country this past summer with David Hackney, a senior in civil engineering, to spend three weeks establishing the Pula Cloud project there. This income-generating project is a collaboration with a doctoral student at the University of Cincinnati and Missouri EDGE, a company owned by Sarah Oerther. Pula Cloud provides villagers with computers so they can sort through 40,000 images from a medical database to narrow them down for a researcher.

“Computers can’t process these images like a human can,” says Oerther. “And the researcher doesn’t have time to go through all those images. We’d like to start a similar project in small communities near Rolla that need income generation as well.”

Another project in Kenya, the Nutrition Partnership, will teach animal husbandry to widows. “Widows will learn to raise chickens for eggs, and the meat will be given to the schools to improve nutrition,” says Oerther. The Oerthers will lend the funds for the chickens and associated capital, and have begun fundraising for a school lunch program.

Oerther is confident the projects in Kenya will be as successful as the ones in Tanzania. “The village in Tanzania now provides its own clean water,” he says. “The Roche Health Center we started has a full-time doctor and several nurses. Diarrheal diseases and childhood mortality are down, and the nutrition program has improved students’ health, academic performance and school attendance by 25 percent.”

Briefly

Shamsher Prakash, professor emeritus of civil engineering, was named a Distinguished Member of the American Society of Civil Engineers, the society’s highest accolade.

Glenn Morrison, associate professor of environmental engineering, was elected to the International Society of Indoor Air Quality and Climate Academy of Fellows.

For the second year in a row, the Experimental Mine — home to a popular summer Explosives Camp for high school juniors and seniors — tops a list of “Awesome College Labs” as determined by Popular Science magazine. The rankings appear in the magazine’s September 2011 issue.

S&T students demonstrated environmental technology as part of the “Show-Me the Green: Conservation, Energy and Innovation” event at the Missouri State Fair in August using a model wind farm and a solar thermal collector.

Thanks to a $58,000 grant from the University of Missouri System eLearning initiative, three technical communication programs are now available online — the master of science degree, graduate certificate and graduate minor. The program includes 10 courses for a total of 30 credit hours and will be taught using the university’s Blackboard interface. There will also be live online meetings, and video and audio components. Working on this project are Ed Malone, associate professor of English and technical communication and director of the department’s online program, Kathryn Northcut, associate professor, and David Wright, assistant professor.

Missouri S&T is again classified as a research university with high research activity by the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching and will again be included in the U.S. News & World Report annual listing of national colleges and universities. S&T was omitted from the U.S. News 2012 ranking because of a change Carnegie made in 2010 moving S&T’s classification to “specialty” engineering based on the percentage of engineering graduates. S&T was not notified of the change.

Dodging debris

William Schonberg says academia is cool because you usually get to research what you're really curious about. The chair of civil, architectural and environmental engineering likes to study high-speed impacts — specifically, those caused by space debris.

Schonberg was a member of a National Research Council committee that recently issued a 180-page report warning about the dangers of space debris.

One of the first "hits" was on a space shuttle in the early 1980s, when a very small piece of paint hit one of its windows. Now, low-Earth orbit is becoming increasingly cluttered by trash.

The large stuff — rocket boosters and so on — typically ends up falling back down and burning up in the atmosphere. But smaller projectiles continue to race around the planet and cause problems for astronauts and engineers. Schonberg studies the amount of damage that could be caused by potential impacts.

"We can track almost anything four inches in diameter and larger," says Schonberg, who first got involved in this type of research at the University of Alabama in Huntsville, which is located near NASA's Marshall Space Flight Center. "There are risk assessments performed before each NASA mission."

In recent years, evasive actions to avoid such projectiles in space have been more common.

As more and more rockets, shuttles and satellites have been launched, low-Earth orbit has been polluted by junk. In addition to high-tech stuff that is just left in orbit, even frozen human waste that was jettisoned years ago poses problems. "We're talking about projectiles that travel at around 18,000 miles per hour," Schonberg says.

And that's to say nothing of potentially even more dangerous natural objects, like meteorites and asteroids.

Of course, with the end of the U.S. shuttle program, not as many American astronauts will be put in harm's way. But the International Space Station is still colonized, and Schonberg thinks humans will continue to explore space. "I hope so," he says. "It's human nature to explore."

In the meantime, scientists will have to continue to monitor space junk closely. It's not currently plausible from a cost perspective to clean up all the stuff circling our planet.

MISSOURI HAS MORE THAN
3,000
MILES OF RIVERS

AND RAJIV MISHRA WANTS TO USE THEM TO HARNESS
ENERGY.

So much potential water energy, so close to home

Missouri has more than 3,000 miles of rivers and Rajiv Mishra wants to use them to harness energy and decrease dependence on power currently derived from coal and nuclear plants.

Mishra thinks the ancient past and the modern present are converging in some ways. “In the past,” he says, “we prayed to the sun god, to the wind god and to the water god. Now we are back to that point.”

Mishra, former Curators’ Professor of materials science, is talking about the three primary sources of renewable energy that Mother Nature produces naturally. Unfortunately, the state of Missouri can’t really rely on getting as much wind and sun as some states. But what the state does have is plenty of water.

Though landlocked, Missouri has more than 3,000 miles of rivers. And the water in rivers flows predictably in one direction.

“Water that is flowing constantly has much more energy potential than wind because of higher power density,” says Mishra, who is now on the faculty of the University of North Texas.

The idea is to put systems resembling wind turbines in running water to produce the energy. This is called hydrokinetic energy, not to be confused with hydro-electric energy produced by dams, which rely on gravity to make electricity via water and generators.

Many big cities in the U.S. are located on major rivers, including Kansas City and St. Louis. Between the two cities, 90,000 cubic feet of water is flowing per second on average. Mishra thinks hydrokinetic energy should be used to help power both metropolitan areas and other towns on the state’s rivers.

Incidentally, Mishra says one study shows that 98 percent of fish that come in contact with the turbines would be fine.

Several different designs for hydrokinetic systems are under development and are being tested on campus. The sizes will eventually depend on the volumes of water in a particular river.

According to Joshua Rovey, assistant professor of mechanical and aerospace engineering and an investigator on the project, gauges are being embedded in the turbine blades as part of a monitoring system.

“With this technology, we can actively monitor the blade health as it evolves over time, significantly reducing operation and maintenance costs,” Rovey says.

Working with Mishra and Rovey are K. Chandrashekhara, Curators’ Professor of mechanical and aerospace engineering; Xiaoping Du, associate professor of mechanical and aerospace engineering; Arindam Banerjee, assistant professor of mechanical and aerospace engineering; Jonathan Kimball, assistant professor of electrical and computer engineering; a post-doctoral student and 10 other S&T students, including two undergraduates. The research is funded by the Office of Naval Research.

Exploring JFK's doubts, legacy

A new biography released by two S&T historians examines the life and political career of President John F. Kennedy. In it, authors Michael E. Meagher and Larry D. Gragg look at the choices Kennedy made during his brief tenure, including civil rights, the Cuban Missile Crisis and the “space race.”

John F. Kennedy, A Biography

“discusses Kennedy’s tragic miscalculations in the Bay of Pigs and his doubts about democracy,” says Meagher, associate professor of history and political science at S&T. “Kennedy first expressed these doubts when he was a Harvard undergraduate. He continued to question democracy in his later political life, including during his presidency.”

Meagher says the book also delves into Kennedy’s willingness to use “fear-based tactics” to manipulate the American people during the Berlin Crisis of 1961 and the Cuban Missile Crisis of 1962.

This is Meagher’s first book. Gragg, Curators’ Teaching Professor and chair of history and political science, has authored books about the Salem Witch Trials, the Quakers and the colonization of the West Indies island of Barbados. He will soon publish a book about the perceptions of Las Vegas in popular culture and a biography of Benjamin “Bugsy” Siegel, who played a role in the development of Las Vegas.

Can you read the sign?

If there’s one lesson that transportation engineers want drivers to learn, it’s to pay attention while driving in construction zones. That’s why Ghulam Bham, assistant professor of civil, architectural and environmental engineering, and his students are studying the effectiveness of dynamic variable message signs that are often used in highway work zones.

When used effectively, these devices give motorists real-time information about current traffic conditions, like traffic congestion or reduced speeds. The messages displayed are automated and based on data collected by sensors that are placed alongside the road.

The signs are common sights to motorists who travel on Interstate 44 in Missouri. For example, the signs were recently used in construction zones near Lebanon and Richland while the Gasconade River bridge, built in 1955, underwent an overhaul.

“We are evaluating drivers’ perceptions of the signs,” Bham says. “In addition to collecting video data and sensor information, we conducted a survey of 100 passenger and truck drivers who had stopped at a nearby gas station.”

Last year, more than 2,500 vehicles were involved in work zone crashes in the St. Louis area. Eight people died during those crashes and many more were injured. According to the Missouri Department of Transportation, most of the crashes in work zones were rear-end crashes, which usually indicates that one or more vehicles crashed into stopped or slowed traffic ahead.

“Dynamic message signs, when used in construction zones, can reduce delay and rear-end crashes, and improve traffic flow by informing drivers of real-time conditions,” Bham adds.

Bham also plans to create a virtual work zone using these signs to further collect driver perceptions using the campus driving simulator.

The house of the future, designed at S&T today

In the house of the future, built-in sensors will measure the weather outside and automatically adjust indoor air temperatures. Homeowners will be able to monitor the system with their smartphones.

Using a weather station funded by the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) and installed at Missouri S&T’s Solar Village, researchers began work this fall to make the home of the future the home of today, and save homeowners up to 40 percent in the cost of cooling their homes.

Joon-Ho Choi, assistant professor of civil, architectural and environmental engineering, is leading the project with funding from a P3 (people, prosperity, planet) grant from the EPA.

The team will install a small weather station — complete with wind turbine — outside one of the houses at the Solar Village. The weather station will measure the four main factors that impact indoor climate — solar radiation, air temperature, humidity and wind — and communicate information to a computer inside the solar house. Small sensors will be placed throughout the house to monitor conditions. The data will allow the house to control its own temperatures and conserve significant amounts of energy.

“It takes out the human factor,” says Choi, who predicts that houses will one day be equipped with windows that open and close on their own, depending on weather conditions. “It will enhance human comfort while saving energy without additional cooling.”

Choi’s group will travel to Washington, D.C., next spring to share their results and compete for an additional grant of $90,000, which would enable them to take the design to real-world applications.

“WE DIDN'T HAVE TIME TO THINK ABOUT IT, WE JUST HAD TO DO IT.”

When athletic trainers go through certification to administer cardiopulmonary resuscitation or use an automated external defibrillator (AED), they rarely think they will actually have to use that training in real life.

But on May 23, Missouri S&T athletic trainers Samantha Welter and Elizabeth Sisemore had to use that training. And their actions saved the life of a man in the Student Recreation Center.

Tom Brown, a regular participant in lunchtime basketball games in the facility, was preparing for a pick-up game that afternoon when he collapsed. Thanks to the immediate response of assistant basketball coach Joey Goodson — the first to check on Brown after he fell — and assistant football coaches Nate Saum and Brett Sykes, Welter and Sisemore were tracked down to attend to the situation.

“Both of us were in the front office at the time and the coaches told us that someone had passed out,” Sisemore recalls. “When I got in there (approximately two minutes after it happened), he was not responsive and was having trouble breathing. Sam went to get the AED device while I started to perform CPR, then when she got back we started a two-person CPR.”

The athletic trainers then used the AED device to deliver an electric shock that restored the heartbeat and revived Brown just before medical personnel arrived.

Welter says it was just a matter of reacting instinctively to the situation.

“We didn’t have time to think about it; we just had to do it,” Welter says. “The whole thing lasted about five minutes, but it felt like it took forever. I will say that everything that happened went the way that it should have. Everyone worked together very well and was very helpful.”

A few days later, the local emergency personnel who arrived on the scene cited the two athletic trainers, both in their second year on the Missouri S&T staff, for their quick response and the use of CPR and the AED.

“The AEDs proved to be 100 percent effective,” Sisemore says. “The devices are very instructive and tell you everything to do, as well as keep a record for medical personnel of all the information while treating someone. This has helped us as well with EKGs (electrocardiograms) so we know more to prevent this from happening in the future. We’ve also added more machines in the facility.” There are now 12 AED devices in the building.

And thanks to the fast action of Welter and Sisemore, Brown will soon be able to return to the basketball court.

S&T athletic program fifth in GLVC in final Director's Cup standings

Missouri S&T's athletic program finished fifth among the 15 institutions in the Great Lakes Valley Conference for the 2010-11 season in the final Learfield Sports Director's Cup standings. The standings are designed to recognize campuses for overall excellence in intercollegiate athletics.

S&T finished 92nd overall among the 284 NCAA Division II institutions, putting it in the top one-third of all schools in the division. S&T scored points in five sports in NCAA championship competition during the most recent year, earning points in men's soccer, swimming, women's basketball, men's track and field and baseball, with the ninth-place finishes recorded by the swimming and men's soccer teams being the highest among them. S&T finished with 213 points overall.

Miner soccer team in national rankings

On the heels of a season in which it won a share of the GLVC regular-season championship and reached the title game of the NCAA Division II Midwest Regional, Missouri S&T's men's soccer program began the season among the top teams in the pre-season rankings.

The Miners landed a No. 13 national ranking in the pre-season for Division II by the National Soccer Coaches Association of America. S&T also finished 13th in the final national poll a year ago.

The Miners were ranked second among the teams in the Midwest region behind Northern Kentucky University. The only other regional team in the pre-season Top 25 is Ashland, a team the Miners defeated in the opening round of the regional tournament last season.

Former Miner on gold medal-winning team at World Championships

Former Missouri S&T offensive lineman Brandon Jordan, BAdm'09, played this summer on the U.S. national team that won the gold medal at the fourth International Federation of American Football Senior World Championships in Australia.

Jordan was an offensive tackle for the Miners from 2007 to 2009 and was a two-year starter for S&T. He was a starter during the 2008 campaign, when the Miners won the Great Lakes Football Conference championship as part of a record-setting 7-4 season. Missouri S&T posted its highest modern-day total of 408 points during that season.

Team USA won the tournament by defeating Canada 50-7 in the championship game for its third straight title. Prior to that, Team USA defeated Australia 61-0, Germany 48-7 and Mexico 17-7 to reach the championship game.

Missouri S&T was named the GLVC's recipient of the NCAA Division II Community Engagement Award of Excellence for the 2010-11 season. The Miner athletic program was cited for its Military Appreciation Day activities during an October 2010 football game against Urbana University. One institution from every Division II conference and one conference as a whole were recognized by the NCAA for work to build bridges in their communities. Each institution that won an award received $500 from the NCAA.

Brett Vessell, BSci'11, who earned All-America honors last spring at the NCAA Division II Track & Field Championships as a member of S&T's 4x100-meter relay team, has been named as a recipient of an NCAA post-graduate scholarship for the 2010-11 academic year.

S&T's swimming and volleyball teams were honored by their respective national governing bodies for their work in the classroom. The swimmers were the second-highest ranked team among Division II institutions on the College Swimming Coaches Association of America's team, while the volleyball squad was among 57 schools in Division II to record a team grade point average of 3.30.

OFF THE GRID

OCT. 06-09 MINER LEGACY

Sarah Bax, a senior in civil engineering, was crowned Homecoming Queen. John Van Gels, a senior in petroleum engineering, was named Homecoming King.

» 2011 AWARDEES SELECTED BY THE MINER ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

At the Miner Legends Banquet during Homecoming, the Miner Alumni Association honored a select group of alumni for their accomplishments and their devotion to the association, the campus and students. Selected from an impressive list of nominees, these awardees represent some of our most talented and dedicated alumni and faculty.

« KAPPA DELTA

Kappa Delta has a new $3.1 million home on the corner of Pine Street and Bishop Avenue. The partially brick building has a high vaulted ceiling over the entry way.

KAPPA SIGMA »

Kappa Sigma recently completed a 9,000-square-foot addition to its house. The $5 million renovation of the white house includes geothermal heating.

« SIGMA PHI EPSILON

Sigma Phi Epsilon recently completed a $3.3 million renovation of its house, which was originally constructed in 1970. Its facade is constructed with stone pillars, a tan exterior and the traditional red door.

Miner Alumni Association

The association proactively strives to create an environment — embodying communication with and participation by Miner alumni and friends — to foster strong loyalty to the university and growth of the association. The association represents and serves more than 50,000 living graduates and former students.

Today's association carries on the proud tradition of support to Missouri S&T, providing more than $500,000 in annual aid to campus students, faculty and staff.

STAT hosts opening week barbecue

Students Today, Alumni Tomorrow (STAT), the alumni student organization, hosted a free barbecue during its first meeting of the year. On Wednesday, Aug. 31, more than 60 students enjoyed grilled hamburgers and hot dogs and received information about STAT.

STAT member Lucas Wessel (left) of O'Fallon, Mo., a senior in nuclear engineering, and vice president Matthew Crinnian of Webb City, Mo., a junior in nuclear engineering and economics, work the grill.

104th Best Ever St. Pat's Celebration

All alumni, their families and guests are invited to attend the St. Pat's pre-parade party from 8:30-11 a.m. on Saturday, March 17, in the lobby of Leach Theatre in Castleman Hall, 10th and Main streets.

Stop by to visit with your fellow Miners. Complimentary coffee, juice and cinnamon rolls will be served. Beer, Bloody Marys and Mimosas will be available at a cash bar.

Immediately following the St. Pat's parade, all alumni, their families and guests are invited back to Castleman Hall for pizzas and $1 beer until 2 p.m.

Make plans to travel to Rolla for St. Pat's or attend one of the section events in your area.

Help make the 104th celebration the Best Ever!

Nine student groups receive funding

The student organization funding subcommittee of the Miner Alumni Association's Student and Young Alumni Relations Committee awarded $2,250 to the following student organizations for fall 2011 projects:

- Blue Key Honor Society
- Campus Ministries Association
- Concrete Canoe Student Design Team
- Engineers Without Borders
- Hydrogen Design Solutions
- Newman Center
- Society of Women Engineers
- Solar House Design Team
- Zeta Tau Alpha

Lang among top executives at Arch Coal

Paul Lang, MinE'83, was recently elected executive vice president of operations for Arch Coal. He was previously the corporation's senior vice president.

Lang is responsible for the safety, environmental and financial performance of the company's mining operations, as well as exploration, geology, operations planning, engineering, mine development, corporate procurement and maintenance.

Lang, who is also a graduate of the advanced management program at Harvard Business School, has been a member of the corporation's senior officer team since 2006. He joined Arch Coal in 1984.

William Hubbard, ChE, recently received his 17th patent. U.S. Patent No. 7,735,460 teaches how vegetable oils, with proper blending, can be used as fuel for ordinary autos. He reports that since retirement in 1988, he's been busy working on various patents, including several that "involve a fuel that is safe and legal to store in your car in case you run out of gas. It is called 'Spare Fuel' and is on the market now."

1947

William P. McKinnell Jr., MetE, is living comfortably in retirement at Holly Creek, 5500 E. Peak View Ave., Apt. 2226, Centennial, CO 80121.

1950

Eugene A. Bartels, CE, and his wife, Marilyn, celebrated their 60th anniversary on Aug. 12 and he turned 86 on Aug. 27.

Raymond W. Davis, ME, earned an MBA from Benedictine University in 1980 and has been retired since 1990 from Siemens. "I'm still in good health at 87. Rolla is my hometown. God bless America."

Donald J. Dowling Jr., ChE: "Still in Sun City, Ariz. — when not traveling to grandkids' weddings."
Elmer D. Packheiser, ME: "My wife and I are enjoying our retirement years on a six-acre place in Cumberland Valley near Greencastle, Pa., with our 31-year-old horse and two cats."

1953

William E. "Bill" Patterson, PetE: "I finally got a Ph.D. by marrying a lovely retired college professor in May. June and I plan to visit the Rolla campus in 2012." The couple funded a staff office in the Hasselmann Alumni House.

1957

Donald R. Bowers, ME, MS EMgt'71, is enjoying retirement in Washington, Mo.

Edward B. Campen, CE: "We are still moving along. The old oil patch is getting some steam up again. If we could get the feds out of our face, we would not be in the fix we are now in."

Russell E. Wege, PetE: "My wife and I are enjoying good health. We enjoy our grandchildren and doing service projects for others."

1959

Robert T. Stelloh, GGph, MS MinE'61, and his wife, Audrey, celebrated their first anniversary.

1961

Barbara (Lay) Patterson, Chem, MS Chem'65, PhD Chem'85: "Thank you for the photo CD and for a wonderful Golden Alumni Reunion celebration."

1962

Henry Pat Duvall, Math: "I am still tutoring math at South Seattle Community College and volunteering as a judge of student projects at the local Aviation High School."

1963

Shafique Naiyer, CE: "We are enjoying retirement by traveling. We spend November to April in our vacation home in Desert Hot Spring, Calif." The couple traveled to Turkey for 17 days and spent three weeks in Arizona visiting the Grand Canyon, Sedona and Scottsdale. They are planning a three-month visit to India.

Author explores disasters

Randy Rapp, CE'83, explores everything from kitchen grease fires to volcanic eruptions in his new book, Disaster Recovery Project Management: Bringing Order from Chaos, published by Purdue University Press.

"While each type of event requires a very different scale and type of response, the project management challenges that face restoration and reconstruction professionals after the emergency are remarkably similar," Rapp says.

1964

Mark W. Morris, Phys, and his wife, JoAnne, founded and volunteer with the Help One Child ministry. Check out their website at www.helponechild.org.

1966

Michael J. Brynac, CE: "Retired and loving it. The sky is blue, the grass is green and I am playing golf. Thank you, God, I'm vertical."

1968

Bobby T. Cox, MetE: "Sandy and I still enjoy working at Acorn Stamping, our small manufacturing business that is still growing in spite of the terrible economy. No retirement plans yet. We still race our sailboat and enjoy our grandkids and our cottage on the lake. Life is good."

1969

Donald Keith Rice, MS Tch Math: "I tutor mathematics at Florissant Valley Community College and teach mathematics to high school homebound students for the Special School District in St. Louis County."

1970

Vicki M. Andreae, Math: "I retired last year after 20 years with CACI Inc. and 17 years with the federal government. Moved from Arlington, Va., to Charlottesville, Va."

1971

John Braaf, ME, joined Process Control Corp. as regional sales manager for the western half of the United States.
Robert Lee Ward, CE, MS CE'74, was named National Advisor of the Year for Tau Beta Pi, the national engineering honorary. He is a professor at Ohio Northern University.

1975

Stephen A. Kambol, CE: "I am a principal program manager for CH2M HILL in Seattle, where, for the past five years, I've managed a 60-firm consulting team in preparing ELS and preliminary engineering documents for the Puget South Regional Transit Authority's 14-mile East Link Light Rail Project."
Steven R. Witthar, MinE, recently joined Skelly and Loy Inc. as assistant vice president and engineering manager in its Wise, Va., office.

1977

Larry L. McNary, MinE: "After retiring from the Rock Island Arsenal two years ago, I have moved back to west central Illinois where I have been farming."

Mueller receives Smithsonian award

George Mueller, EE'39, was awarded a 2011 National Air and Space Museum trophy by the Smithsonian Institution in April during a ceremony in Washington, D.C. Mueller, head of the Office of Manned Space Flight for NASA during the Apollo program, was presented with a Lifetime Achievement trophy.

The award recognizes outstanding achievements in the fields of aerospace science and technology. Winners receive a miniature version of the "Web of Space," a sculpture by artist John Safer.

"George Mueller led the program that put humans on the moon," says Gen. J.R. Dailey, director of the museum.

DONORS AND VOLUNTEERS

MISSOURI UNIVERSITY OF SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

The Missouri S&T Registry of Donors and Volunteers is more than a list of the university's contributors and volunteers. It represents an honor roll of the university's partners in education — those who believe in the high quality education offered in Rolla, those who endorse the academic tradition of passing down knowledge from faculty to students, and those who assist in preparing tomorrow's leaders for the challenges and opportunities that await. These individuals and organizations are true believers in Missouri S&T's mission and the value of science and engineering education. Through their generous contributions of time and talent, these donors and volunteers have chosen to become an active part of an S&T education and are ensuring that worthy and deserving students continue to be bearers of the Miner tradition.

The individuals and organizations included in this registry provided their support during the fiscal year beginning July 1, 2010, and ending June 30, 2011. University staff members have made every effort to provide a complete and accurate listing. Please accept our sincere apology if any mistakes or omissions have been made, and please do us the favor of helping correct our records by notifying the university. You may contact:

Summary of fundraising

During the 2011 fiscal year, the university received $16.6 million in gifts and pledges from alumni, friends, organizations, corporations, parents and employees of S&T. The percentage of alumni who made a contribution to the university (called the "alumni participation rate") held steady at 18 percent, a testament to the loyalty of S&T graduates to their alma mater at a time when many other universities are losing support. The following charts illustrate the sources of financial support and their designations. For any questions about giving to Missouri S&T or for more information about making a gift, please contact Joan Nesbitt, vice chancellor for university advancement, at 573-341-7808 or nesbittj@mst.edu.

ChemE alumni build for the future

Whether he is providing funding for science programs at his grandchildren's elementary school or creating scholarships through Missouri S&T and the National Propane Gas Association, Jim Bertelsmeyer, ChE'66, is passionate about supporting science and engineering education. Now, Bertelsmeyer's latest financial contribution to Missouri S&T may have the greatest impact on the future of engineering education.

Bertelsmeyer recently pledged $5 million to support construction of a new building for his home department. The university plans to name the future chemical and biological engineering building Bertelsmeyer Hall in his honor.

"I look at this as an opportunity to help the chemical and biological engineering department maintain its reputation as one of the premier engineering programs on campus — and in the nation," says Bertelsmeyer, the retired founder, chair and CEO of Heritage Propane Partners in Tulsa.

A longtime supporter of the university, Bertelsmeyer is a past president of the Miner Alumni Association, and a member of the Academy of Chemical Engineers, the Order of the Golden Shillelagh and the Missouri S&T Board of Trustees.

Bertelsmeyer's gift served as a catalyst for a fundraising blitz to raise private funds for the building project. In a matter of weeks, more than 60 alumni contributed $8 million to the effort.

Joining Bertelsmeyer as a major donor to the effort was Bipin Doshi, ChE'62, MS ChE'63. He and his wife, Linda, pledged $1 million toward the building project.

"We absolutely believe in higher education and in the future of Missouri S&T,"

Bertelsmeyer

Doshi

says Doshi, the president and CEO of Schafer Gear Works of South Bend, Ind. "If our gift can help future students to get a great education, then this will be a purpose well-served."

Doshi is also a member of the Academy of Chemical Engineers and the Order of the Golden Shillelagh.

Plans call for the 63,542-square-foot building to be constructed on the northwest corner of State and 11th streets. Construction is to begin in November 2012 with completion scheduled for May 2014.

Even though funding for the building is complete, the department still needs $2 million for new lab equipment and maintenance. Fundraising efforts will continue to ensure the new building is equipped with state-of-the-art lab and classroom space.

Registry of Members

Members of the Order of the Golden Shillelagh (OGS) represent the pinnacle of private support, having demonstrated uncommon commitment to the advancement of Missouri S&T. Their support is set apart by boldness of vision depth of generosity, and — in many cases — a remarkable longevity stretching into decades of partnership. OGS members have not simply given to S&T, they have stood with us in our efforts to realize the promise and potential of this exceptional university.

Leaving a legacy: The Hasselmann Society (Clagh of the Horizon)

Karl Hasselmann, MinE'25, left a legacy of geological exploration for people around the globe and a legacy of philanthropy for S&T alumni.

An internationally known geologist, Hasselmann's system for underwater oil exploration led to the world's first underwater oil field and the first offshore oil wells in the Gulf of Mexico. At Missouri S&T, Hasselmann's contributions total more than $14.8 million, and continue to grow each year.

The Hasselmann Society recognizes those individuals who have made provisions for Missouri S&T in their will or other estate plans. Through the generosity and forethought of these alumni and friends, programs and facilities are preserved and improved, opportunities are developed for students and faculty, and Missouri S&T's future is secured. Individuals who have made the ultimate gift by remembering Missouri S&T in their estate plans are recognized at the highest clagh level within the Order of the Golden Shillelagh donor society, the Clagh of the Horizon.

Please share with us if you have included Missouri S&T in your plans so we may express our gratitude and welcome you into the Hasselmann Society.

The Karl and Marjory Hasselmann Estate provides funding every year for university support.

Endowing our future

Endowment contributions are the most precious form of giving to S&T. Establishing an endowment requires a minimum contribution of $15,000, and the endowed gift is invested by the university to ensure a stable source of permanent funding for the purposes agreed upon by the donor and the university. The following list represents S&T's newest endowments and the generous donors who made them possible during fiscal year 2011. We salute the individuals and corporations who have chosen to invest in Missouri S&T's future.

- Dr. Thomas Beveridge Graduate Teaching Assistant and Geology Field Camp Awards
- Michael and Joyce Bytnar Product Innovation and Creativity Professorship
- Hugh and Linda Cole Silver and Gold Scholarship
- Crowder College Transfer Scholarship Fund
- Cary and Martha Dunston Silver and Gold Scholarship
- Havener Center Maintenance Fund
- Barbara Sue Johnston and James V. Leonard Scholarship
- KMST Radio Station Endowed Fund
- John and Nancy Keating Silver and Gold Scholarship
- McDonough Engineering Corp.
- Mississippi Lime Co. Endowment
- Missouri Southern State University Transfer Scholarship Fund
- Dennis and Ann Whitty Silver and Gold Scholarship
- Frank Winfield Endowed Scholarship Fund

Names printed in green represent endowments established with the Miner Alumni Association.

Design your gift: Invest in Missouri S&T

Cash (including checks, credit cards or five-year pledges) is the most popular and flexible type of charitable gift. Cash gifts are deductible to 50 percent of adjusted gross income (AGI), with a five-year carry-forward.

A gift of securities is deductible at full market value to 30 percent AGI, with a five-year carry-forward. By giving the securities directly, donors may avoid capital gains taxes that would have been payable if they sold the stock and gave cash. Closely held stock may sometimes be accepted.

Matching corporate gifts enable donors to double, triple or even quadruple their gift, depending on the matching gift policy. Matching gifts from corporations are "soft-credited" to the individual donors for gift club recognition.

Charitable gift annuities ($10,000 minimum) pay a guaranteed fixed income to a donor and/or a beneficiary for life with the residual value of the annuity given to Missouri S&T or the Miner Alumni Association upon the death of the annuitant. (Income tax deduction, estate tax savings and capital gains tax savings.)

Charitable remainder trusts ($20,000 minimum) pay an income to the donor or beneficiary for a term of years or for life with the remaining principal given to Missouri S&T upon the death of the donor or beneficiary. (Charitable remainder trusts may include income tax deduction, estate tax savings and capital gains tax savings.)

Testamentary gifts (bequests through wills) give many donors the greatest opportunity to make a substantial gift to Missouri S&T or the Miner Alumni Association.

Charitable lead trusts pay an income to Missouri S&T for a term of years; at term's end, the remaining principal or asset is returned to the donor or designated beneficiary. (These gifts may include income tax deduction, estate tax savings and capital gains tax savings.)

This information is not intended as tax and legal advice. For legal and tax advice, please consult an attorney and tax professional. For more information about giving, please contact Greg Harris at 573-341-6533 or email gfharris@mst.edu.

Registry of Donors

We express a special thanks to our faculty, staff, students and friends for contributing financially to our university's success. Many have devoted much of their careers and lives to preparing students and transforming the world with their ideas and solutions. Their gifts and participation gave the need for private support a broader visibility and a sense of ownership on campus. The following list includes cash gifts received from July 1, 2010, to June 30, 2011.

Snake invasion began in 1912, four years after the first St. Pat's Celebration. Before 1944, every student carried a shillelagh. Today, it's just freshmen in student organizations. The traditional bashing of snakes is the first "event" of the annual St. Pat's Celebration. Fortunately for students (and the serpents), the snakes are plastic.

Registry of Volunteers

Thousands of Missouri S&T alumni, parents and friends donate their time and talents to advance the university. They serve on various committees, academies and advisory councils; work as guest lecturers, volunteer staff, legislative advocates, leaders and coordinators of alumni sections; and contribute through a variety of other efforts. S&T is grateful for the special commitment of our volunteers, and we wish to recognize them for their efforts during the past year. These volunteers are recognized for the July 1, 2010, to June 30, 2011, fiscal year.

Bob and Ginny Pahl

Bob Pahl, ChE'68, MS ChE'70, PhD ChE'74, was a student in Rolla when the "Old Chem" building burned in the late 1960s and was still a Rolla student when a new building was constructed in the early 1970s.

"In the almost 40 years since the new building appeared, time has taken a toll on both the old and new buildings," Pahl says. "The labs are falling behind the times and more space is needed."

Pahl and his wife, Ginny, recently contributed $250,000 toward construction of a new chemical and biological engineering building at Missouri S&T. The university plans to name the building for Jim Bertelsmeyer, ChE'66, who gave the lead gift for the project.

The project is an important one to the Pahls.

"Ginny and I felt strongly about the need for the new building and the value that Missouri S&T provided to me in my career," says Pahl, who retired in 2004 following a 30-year career with Phillips Petroleum. "The new building will help the chemical and biological engineering department become one of the best in the nation."

Pahl says he and Ginny are a part of the Missouri S&T family and want to help in any way they can. And help they have. A member of the Academy of Chemical Engineers, Pahl has coordinated reunions for his class, recruited for Phillips and spoken at campus lectures. Ginny is on the board of directors for the Order of the Golden Shillelagh and Pahl is on the Provost's Engineering Advisory Board.

"We started to give back to the university as soon as we were financially able," Pahl says. "I arrived in Rolla in September 1964 as a wide-eyed freshman in chemical engineering and left nine years later with three degrees, all in that department," Pahl says. "Ginny joined me in 1966 to continue her education in the math department. While she did not finish her degree, we both feel Missouri S&T is 'our' university and continue to support it."

Editor's note: Read more about the new chemical and biological engineering building on page 49.

Parents: If this issue of Missouri S&T Magazine is addressed to your son or daughter who has established a separate permanent address, please notify us of the new address: 573-341-4145 or alumni@mst.edu.

Nothing beats a classic

It's no secret Miners love their cars, and there's no better evidence of that than the personalized license plates we see at alumni events around the country.

That's why we're dedicating our summer 2012 Missouri S&T Magazine to Miners and their cars.

We want to know your vehicle's make, model and year; how long you've owned it; and why you love your ride.

Email your information to alumni@mst.edu along with a photo of you and your car. We'll select the most interesting stories and vehicles to share.

Michael, ME'68, and Joyce Bytmar enjoy driving their 1967 Chevrolet Corvette Sting Ray.
