AMA President Addresses 1994 Graduates Dr. McAfee, father of graduate, speaks at Hooding ceremony

"Medicine and Justice together are much greater than the sum of our parts. Together, we can begin the important work of healing America."

*Dr. Robert McAfee
President-Elect, AMA*

What? Bring a medical doctor in to speak to graduating law students? What kind of law school graduation is that? Lawyers are supposed to speak to graduating law students, doctors to graduating med students, and never the twain shall meet. That's unfortunate. Robert E. McAfee, MD, a surgeon practicing in South Portland Maine and president-elect of the American Medical Association, was the featured speaker at Campbell's Law School Recognition and Awards Ceremony. That ceremony is part of a series of events held in conjunction with law school graduation. By the time you are reading this article, Dr. McAfee will have assumed the presidency of the American Medical Association. He is the first doctor from Maine to be elected AMA president, and is well known for his public stands against smoking, substance abuse, physical and sexual violence against women, and gun violence.

Dr. McAfee's words to the graduates are summarized below:

The Spirit of Service

Today is a perfect day to be speaking to those about to enter on their profession. Today is the birthday of Henri Dunant. He was born 166 years ago on this day in Geneva, Switzerland. Now, Dunant is not exactly a household name. Yet he has direct bearing on my remarks today. Today is World Red Cross day, and Henri Dunant was the founder of the Red Cross. Dunant was a young Swiss businessman when he came upon the Battle of Solferino, in northern Italy, in 1859. He saw more than 20,000 troops lying wounded on the ground, and most of them died because they couldn't get simple medications. Dunant wrote a book about what he saw, and proposed a permanent volunteer organization to care for wounded soldiers. Dunant wasn't satisfied with just making proposals -- he had a hunger to put them into action. So he gathered together what would become the first international committee of the Red Cross. For his work, Henri Dunant was a co-winner of the very first Nobel Peace Prize. But even more important, his vision, determination and perseverance has helped ease the pain for millions of people around the world.

Twenty years after Dunant's achievement, a Baptist minister was roaming through the rolling farm country that surrounds us here today. As he traveled about, he was concerned there was no place for the young people in the area to get an education. James Archibald Campbell founded this university with the idea that he could educate the local young people. But that was not an end in itself. Campbell knew that the real purpose of an education is to enable people to serve others.

Your fine law school inherited his legacy -- a legacy that trains lawyers to go back to their communities and lead, and counsel and serve the people. Like Dunant, James Archibald Campbell believed that all of us have a responsibility to serve. They knew the true meaning of being part of a profession is not status, or glamour, or fame, or riches -- but service.

What inspires someone to devote themselves to a life of service? Henri Dunant and James Archibald Campbell were moved to act by what they saw. When I look around today, this is what I see; this is what moves me: America is at war with itself.

In the time it will take me to complete this sentence, a woman in the United States will be beaten, battered and bruised. Every 12 seconds, 24 hours a day, 365 days a year, a woman is punched, kicked, slapped -- or worse. Every decade, domestic violence kills as many women as the total number of Americans who died in the Vietnam War. Imagine another wall like the Vietnam War Memorial filled with the names of women -- killed not by serial killers, not by strangers, not by some anonymous attacker -- but by people who live under the same roof -- their husbands, their boyfriends, their partners. That's one of the horrors I see when I look around America. Unfortunately, there are others.

In 1992, hand guns were used to murder 13 people in Australia, 33 in Britain, 60 in Japan. And in the United States -- 13,220. That's right, 13,220 men, women and children. No number, no mere statistic can convey the real tragedy of gun violence in America. The headlines, the stories, the numbers have numbed us. But I ask you to remember that behind every one of these awful numbers is a friend, a son, a sister, a mother. As a physician, this is the side of violence I see. Not the social toll. Not the economic toll. But the human toll. Precious lives damaged, wasted, gone.

Why do I puncture this beautiful celebration with this horrible litany? Because we can do something about it! We can change it! You and me, medicine and the law, working together, arm-in-arm, partners. So I'm here not only to celebrate the end of your schooling, but to celebrate the beginning of your service.

It's not going to be easy. I'm not going to kid you. You embark on your new role at one of the toughest times for our country in memory. The economy is being restructured. People are unsure about the future. The way medicine and the law are practiced in this country is on the verge of great change. Tension and anxiety are companions of change, and I know there are tensions between our two great professions. But what we share, what unites us, what we can do together is much, much more important than what divides us. And the only way we can solve the plague of violence in America is to join together, to work together, to serve together. So I celebrate this wonderful beginning, and ask for your help.

Can we do it? Can we begin to turn the tide of violence in America? I honestly don't know the answer. But I do know this. This moment in our history -- just like this moment in your history, this fine afternoon -- is a beginning brimming with promise. Medicine and Justice joined together are much greater than the sum of our parts. Together, we can make a strong start. Together, we can begin the important work of healing America.

Join us. We need you. Service is contagious. Try it and you'll know what I mean. Go back to your communities and be an advocate against violence. Go back to your neighborhood schools, and volunteer one or two nights a month to read to a child, talk to a child, help that child understand the difference between right and wrong -- and, more importantly, show that child its own special worth, its own value as a natural wonder of the world. Go back to the legacy of Henri Dunant and James Archibald Campbell, who teach us today that the heart of a profession is service. Go back to your own heart -- the heart that helped you climb this long path, that's taken you to the height marked "Professional."

I congratulate the class of 1994 on your efforts, your perseverance, your heart. Few reach the heights you have. But don't let this height become a plateau. Strike for the pinnacle. It's up ahead, around the next bend, above the next ridge. You'll reach it on the wings of service.

Post Script

Dr. McAfee has been highly supportive of cooperation between the medical and legal professions. The two professions need to join ranks on many of the pressing issues and challenges that confront our nation.

In recognition of his life of service to others as a medical doctor, community leader and leader in the American Medical Association, Dr. McAfee received an honorary Doctor of Science degree from Campbell University during his visit.

Thank you, Dr. McAfee, for your leadership and message.

CAMPBELL ALUMNA IS FIRST WOMAN DISTRICT ATTORNEY IN COLORADO

Cathy L. Mullens, Class of 1985

While a law student at Campbell University in 1985, Cathy Mullens received a trailblazer award from the Women in Law Association. Since then she has gone on to become a true trailblazer and was the first woman elected as District Attorney in the state of Colorado in November, 1992.

Mullens, 47, mother of two and grandmother of a three-year old, said she never really thought about the state-wide implications of her candidacy. "I returned to the San Luis Valley, my adopted home, after graduating from Campbell wanting to prosecute crime." She worked as the Victim/Witness Coordinator in the District Attorney's Office of the 12th Judicial District while studying for the bar exam, then served as a Deputy District Attorney in that office for approximately one year.

She left the office and went into solo practice in Monte Vista, Colorado, a town of about 8,000 in the six-county District she now serves. After five years in private practice, concentrating in domestic relations, Mullens became the Democratic candidate for District Attorney.

"It was something I always wanted to do," she said, "but I wasn't sure I would have the opportunity."

When the incumbent Democrat was disqualified by the Secretary of State, Mullens was drafted by the six counties. She began her race in July and won five out of the six counties in November.

The 12th Judicial District is one of the largest of the twenty-two Districts in the state of Colorado. It covers the entire San Luis Valley, a high mountain valley located in south-central Colorado. "There are over 5,000 square miles in this Valley," Mullens said, "and I feel like I covered all of them during the campaign."

Since being a trial lawyer had enabled her to travel throughout the six county region, Mullens said the campaign took her to towns where she felt at home. "We have a beautiful Valley here," she said, "it is culturally diverse and it has spectacular scenery. From San Luis, the oldest town in Colorado to Creede, a historic silver-mining town now popular with tourists, Mullens met with people and discussed the problems of crime.

We don't have the kinds of problems Denver and the front-range have, she said recently, and we hope we never will. She says the top priority in her office is to go to trial on appropriate felony cases, murders, sexual assaults and to put more time and energy into the area of juvenile crime.

"We're not afraid to go to trial," Mullens said. "The defense bar recognizes that and because of that we're able to reach reasonable plea agreements in many cases that might have gone to trial in previous years."

Mullens has a staff of three attorneys and has recently added a law clerk who will soon be working primarily in the area of juvenile crime. The District Attorney's Office also houses and supervises a Victim's Compensation Program that granted over $70,000 worth of compensation to crime victims in the past year and a Victim's Assistance Program that provides assistance to crime victims before and during trial preparation and trial.

In addition to her work as District Attorney, Mullens is active in the Colorado Women's Bar Association and served as president of the San Luis Valley Bar Association in 1991. She is vice-chairman of the San Luis Valley Domestic Violence Board and serves on the Juvenile Services Board of the 12th Judicial District. Her daughter, Caitlin Campbell, resides in Colorado Springs with her husband, Mark and daughter, MacKenzie Drew Campbell. Her son, Colin Dangler, is a member of the U.S. Navy medical corps stationed in Orlando, FL.

While at Campbell University, Mullens received a book award in Civil Procedure I in 1982; served on the yearbook staff for 1985; served as a research assistant for Professor Richard Braun in criminal law the summer of 1983; and was a proof reader and article writer for the Campbell Law Observer, 1983-85.

Campbell Alumna to Practice in the "Down Under"

Can you identify this area? Flinders Ranges and Akaroola (which is only six hours from Adelaide). Hint: It's nowhere near Buies Creek. Actually, it's in Australia and that's where you can find Campbell law grad Pat Knutson ('88) and husband, Ron these days.

Pat recently sent us an update on their move to Australia and an in depth description of the wonderful sites they have already taken in since their move to Australia in March of 1993. Pat and Ron seem to be very happy with their move. On their six hour trip from Adelaide to Akaroola they saw a plethora of kangaroos, emus and cockatoos and they were awed by the brilliance of the mountains that were covered with carpets of wild flowers. The only thing that was not visible were people and towns and one wouldn't think that they were disappointed.

Pat's husband, Ron is a General Manager of a South Australian Corporation. And when Ron is asked how long they will be there, his answer has been, "For the duration."

Campbell Law School Moot Court Team Makes Top Eight

The Jerome Prince Evidence Moot Court Team advanced to the Quarterfinals in New York City on March 19, 1994. Third-year law students Melissa Draffin of Norlina, Chris Olson of Charlotte, and Shelli Stoker of Gastonia, NC defeated their counterparts from Touro (NY) Law School, the University of Florida Law School before losing a close quarterfinal match-up with host and eventual winner Brooklyn Law School. Thirty-two law schools from across the country participated in this year's competition. Law Professor Alan L. Button served as coach for the successful Campbell law team. Last year's Campbell team also finished very high, third out of thirty-two law schools.

John Marshall Moot Court Team Makes Top Eight

The John Marshall Privacy and Information Law Moot Court Team from the Norman Adrian Wiggins School of Law placed seventh in this year's national invitational competition among 29 law schools held in Chicago, the second highest finish in school history. Representing Campbell were third-year law students Amy A. Archer of Burlington, NC, Elizabeth Neal Rich of Greensboro, NC and Alan D. Woodlief, Jr. of Fuquay-Varina, NC. The team was coached by Professor Richard A. Lord.

Campbell's participation in the John Marshall National Invitational Competition marks the tenth year that the law school has competed, the fourth time that it has placed in the top eight, and the second consecutive year that Campbell has finished in the top eight.

Other schools competing included Wake Forest University, Florida State University, the University of Florida, New York University, Georgia State University, Nova University, Boston University, Villanova, Chicago Kent, the University of Texas, and the University of Houston, among others.

Trial Teams Advance To National Competition

Trial teams from the Norman A. Wiggins School of Law at Campbell University advanced to the national trial competition in Miami, Florida, April 8-10, after winning the two top spots in the mid-Atlantic regional competition. The trial competition, sponsored by the Association of Trial Lawyers of America, involved over 150 teams representing some 90 law schools.

Twenty teams, representing the top two finishers in each of the 10 regional competitions, met in Miami to determine the national winner. Campbell was one of only three schools to send two teams to the national finals.

A preliminary round of competition narrowed the field of 20 teams to eight teams for the quarter finals. One of Campbell's two teams advanced to the quarter finals only to be stopped by an excellent trial team from the University of Texas.

"Sending two teams to the national finals and advancing as far as the quarter finals in this competition speaks very highly of our students, their trial skills, and their dedication," Professor W.A. Woodruff added.

Stetson University won the national title by defeating the University of Akron in a rematch of last year's final round. Stetson and Akron were the only schools other than Campbell to send two teams to the national finals.

Placement Report

HAVE YOU PAID THE RENT?

It has been said that "service is the rent we pay for living." At the year's mid-point it seems appropriate for us to ask ourselves this question: Have we paid the rent? If the answer is not a resounding "yes," I hope at least some deposit has been made! To question one's individual record of service is not out of line. At the Norman Wiggins School of Law two stated goals are, to educate lawyers who are prepared from the outset of their careers to serve their communities with legal skill in an ethical and intellectual manner, and to instill in students a sense of the responsibility. Are you doing your part?

Opportunities for service are as unlimited as the number of volunteer organizations. Merely being a solid role-model for the new lawyer just beginning his/her practice would be a good start, for we lead so often by example. Leadership positions also abound. Just attend a State Bar meeting in your District, as I had the pleasure to do twice in the month of May, and you'll see a lot of Campbell lawyers. Your classmates are everywhere; on the Superior and District Court benches, on the list of the employees at our District Attorneys'

Offices and Public Defender Offices statewide, and nearly on the North Carolina Court of Appeals.

Year after year, Campbell lawyers have been among those nominated for the North Carolina Bar Association's Annual Pro Bono Service Award. This year there is only one. But that one has surely done her part in serving the needs of indigent clients in the 24th District in greater numbers and for more hours than her fellow lawyers. Surely there is a Volunteer Lawyers Program or Legal Services Office in your community.

In sum, let's ask ourselves just how many hours of community service were we able to squeeze into our busy schedules so far in 1994? Notwithstanding the reality of keeping your billable hours up, could the number of "non-billable" service hours have been higher? If we are all truly honest with ourselves the answer is "yes".
