Considering Health Insurance Options

Effective Jan. 1, Western Kentucky University employees will be provided group health insurance by Plan Source, the Kentucky Health Purchasing Alliance.

"Membership in the alliance will provide University faculty and staff access to a wide range of health insurance options," says Rick Shreve, Manager of Employee Benefits, WKU Department of Human Resources.

The Department currently is meeting with faculty and staff explaining details of the new group health insurance plans, and an open enrollment period is currently underway, ending Nov. 15.

Options available will include three Health Maintenance Organizations (HMOs), Point of Service Plans, preferred provider plans and Kentucky Kare.

Shreve explains POS plans are similar to HMOs, except that they will provide partial benefit payments for out of network services.

Preferred provider Organization, (PPO) plans are similar to the Blue Cross and Blue Shield Plans, Shreve explains.

"The PPOs have provider networks, but they are usually not as restrictive as HMOs and POSs. The PPOs do not require the use of a gatekeeper and will make partial payments for out of network services," Shreve said.

"A Fee for Service Plan (FFS) is also known as an indemnity plan. There are no networks; you may use any provider," Shreve says. The available option will be Kentucky Kare.

In a memorandum to all WKU employees, President Thomas C. Meredith said: "Changes in health insurance options... have provided very challenging decisions for us in recent years. The uncertainty of events at the state level has provided an unstable atmosphere for our planning, and we have taken steps to ensure that your coverage remains at the best level possible."

Dr. Meredith said Western considered joining the Kentucky Health Purchasing Alliance last year, but due to higher costs and instability of the insurance market, determined participation was not to the University's advantage.

"The University had several fundamental disagreements with Alliance policies and procedures; the majority of these disagreements have been resolved to our satisfaction," the President said, adding Western's current providers, Anthem Blue Cross Blue Shield and HealthWise HMO "have presented us with unacceptable rate increases for 1997," - an average 34 percent by Anthem; 13 percent by HealthWise.

Dr. Meredith said Anthem also has notified the University it will drop group coverage if its share of the groups drops below 50 percent.

"It is approximately at this figure now," he said.

Complete details were outlined during the meetings and through mailings from the WKU Department of Human Resources to all employees.

Phonathon more than half way toward goal

Students have raised $210,061 as of last week during the 16th annual Western Kentucky University Phonathon, which runs through Nov. 15.

Students are calling more than 40,000 WKU alumni asking for donations to the University's program.

So far, pledges have come from 4,384 alums, including 636 new donors, says Donald Smith, Phonathon Coordinator in the Office of Alumni Affairs.

Committee to investigate pesticides on WKU Farm

WKU President Thomas C. Meredith has appointed a committee to determine how containers of pesticides were buried on the University's Farm.

Representatives from the Kentucky Division of Water removed a 55-gallon drum and two one-gallon containers of pesticides on Farm property recently.

Other material also has been dumped in sinkholes on the Farm.

Hughes to lead enrollment management

Dr. Luther Hughes, head of WKU's Agriculture Department since 1983, will head the University's recruitment and retention efforts, effective immediately.

Hughes was appointed Assistant to the Vice President for Academic Affairs for Enrollment Management Services by WKU's President, Dr. Thomas C.

Meredith to work under the auspices of the Office of the Vice President for Academic Affairs in working with departments and colleges in their efforts to involve faculty in the recruitment and retention of students.

Dr. Barbara Burch, Vice President for Academic Affairs, said Dr. Hughes and the Agriculture Department "are known for their creative and successful efforts in the recruitment and retention of students. I feel we are very fortunate to have Dr. Hughes in this role, and that we all will benefit from his experience, enthusiasm and commitment to student recruitment."

Hughes is a native of Trigg County.

Dr. Paul Rice Community College Dean

Dr. Paul Rice, who for the past 20 years has served as Adjunct Professor of vocational-technical education at the State University of New York College at Oswego, has been named Dean of the WKU Community College.

"The college here has the potential to give so much back to the community," Western's new dean says. "We want to see the college grow to an enrollment of 3,000 over the next few years."

In preparation for that growth, the WKU Community College will be moving to the University's Institute for Economic Development, located on Nashville Road, south of Bowling Green, to accommodate more than twice the number of students enrolled last semester.

The college will move in the fall semester of 1997.

"This will benefit the University by giving us a greater outreach. By increasing the number of students we serve, we are also increasing Western's appeal throughout the area," Dr. Rice said.

Deborah Wilkins, University Counsel, says the containers were buried against established University procedures.

Wilkins will head the committee, also made up of Dr. Nicholas Crawford, Professor of Geography and Geology, and Dr. Daniel Roenker, a WKU Professor of Psychology.

Wilkins said appropriate measures against individuals responsible will be taken once the group completes its internal investigation.

"In the meantime, the University is cooperating fully with state agencies involved, and will take appropriate measures to rectify the situation," Wilkins said.

Scott Harris of Pro-Tek Environmental Management Company said soil samples taken from the area around the containers passed for tests for toxaphene, a tobacco insecticide, a substance banned from use in the early 1970s, according to Robbie McGuffey, an inspector for the Department of Environmental Protection Division of Waste Management.

Harris said since no groundwater was encountered in the pit, and since soil samples from the pit showed no signs of toxaphene, that there is no concern over groundwater contamination.

Returning members of the council, serving terms which end June 30, 1997 are: Danna Jacobson, Accounts and Fiscal Services; Sue Pillow, Geography and Geology and Norma Jean Lee, Facilities Management.

By Sheila Conway Eison

It was sometime last spring, after an invigorating workout at the Preston Health & Activities Center. I had showered and was nearly dressed when I heard Libby come in from her run and open her locker.

"How'd it go today?" I asked, in usual locker room banter, a collegial routine during the faculty/staff-reserved noon hour.

"I'm back," came her low-key response. Then a giggle.

I peered around from my side of the lockers. She was beaming. I blinked a couple of times; the giggle still lingered in the air. I shook my head; squinted. There she stood, all 110 pounds of her. But instead of a steel magnolia, I saw Ironwoman!

Libby Greaney is an exercise physiologist and is Coordinator of the Student Health Service and Wellness Center's Fitness Lab in the Preston Center. As people do, over the years of working out at the same time, we came to know each other, not necessarily by introduction, but through sharing the common interest of daily exercise.

Aside from that, however, Libby is very unlike the rest of us noon-time athletes.

She has a goal: to participate in the annual Ironman Competition in Hawaii at the end of October next year.

Libby is quiet, actually very modest about her accomplishments. "I'm back" meant she's in full swing readying for that ultimate competition.

Most of her time recently has been consumed working toward a soon-to-be-completed second master's degree in health care administration. She's been a member of the Student Health Service and Wellness Center staff for the past two and a half years. Her first master's is in exercise physiology from the University of New Hampshire.

Winning in a sanctioned race is required to qualify for the Ironman Triathlon, and it's tough. "It's a big goal, a lot of work," says Greaney, who is far from showy, and who detests the idea of drawing attention to herself. It is a personal goal, she explains, that has nothing to do with her job. Her training and all the preparation, as a matter of fact, takes place after work, or at lunchtime.

In the last two years, she has been first woman overall winner in four triathlons, the most recent Sept. 21 in Somerset, Ky., which involved a 3/10 mile swim, 11-mile bike and 5k run. She was sixth over all in the competition, finishing behind five men. Time: one hour.

In July 1995, she was first woman over all in a half-Ironman, which involved a 1.2 mile swim, 56-mile bike race and 13.1 mile run.

...the bike race would be like racing to Louisville, then running from Bowling Green to Russellville...

The Hawaii Ironman competition, which is 18 years old, consists of a 2.4 mile ocean swim, a 112-mile bike race, and finishing a full marathon of 26.2 miles.

Think of it like this: the bike race would be peddling as fast as you can to Louisville, then running from Bowling Green to Russellville— after the big swim, of course.

"It's essentially inhuman," she says with a chuckle, but Greaney is far from smug about it. When she sits back, arms folded, to talk about it, she gets very serious, concerned if she thinks people make over her achievements too much, not because she isn't satisfied with herself, but because of the unwritten rule among athletes: don't compare yourself with others.

It's one of her most attractive qualities, and it encourages us to keep up the exercise instead of doing lunch, or worse, becoming bleary-eyed at the desk with no breaks.

"Granted, I take it beyond what is necessary for a person to achieve essential fitness, but this is what I do; it is who I am, and not just because I'm an exercise physiologist. I was just born into it.

"I have the good fortune to be blessed with a strong body and I am a real individual. When I was growing up, I wasn't afraid of being strong, of being powerful. I knew it at two years old. I liked the experience of being on teams. Sometimes I would get discouraging messages, such as not conforming to what girls should do, but I grew up knowing I am who I am and learned that it's ok to be strong.

"It's a matter of being comfortable with who you are.

"The human body, when given time to adapt, is an incredible machine," she says. "That's why I get sad when I see people abusing their bodies.

"The American Heart Association recently issued a statement that lack of physical exercise is a major public health issue, and it doesn't take a significant amount of time to lower one's risk of heart disease," she says.

"Three to four times a week, 30 to 45 minutes consistently, is all," she says, emphasizing consistently.

"Municipalities need to get involved," says Greaney. "Communities need to think about the exercisers in their cities and towns, the parents and children in strollers who have no place to go, those who want to walk to work, who have no sidewalks."

She's a champion for her cause, as are her co-workers in WKU's Raymond Preston Center.

Nancy Givens is Associate Director of Wellness.

Supportive of her colleague's efforts, Givens herself is dedicated to fitness, both personally and professionally.

She views the mission of the Wellness Center as helping people see that health and fitness "are important to everyone for maintaining quality of life, and to provide services and support to make it easier for people to succeed in making desired lifestyle changes," she says.

Nancy says that the most exciting recent development in the health and fitness field has been the growing body of research that supports active living as one of the most important factors for maintaining good health and vitality through the years, along with not smoking, a healthy diet and moderate weight, and stress reduction attitudes and practices.

Libby Greaney

"Active living goes beyond the workout mode to finding ways to integrate activity throughout our lifestyle. We go hiking or on a canoe trip on weekends, use stairs instead of elevators, walk/bike to the store or work instead of drive, garden outside, and a myriad of other activities to move us away from sedentariness toward active enjoyment," she says.

'I have the good fortune to be blessed with a strong body.'

Citing a recent study by the National Centers for Disease Control, ranking Kentucky 46th in the nation in terms of sedentary lifestyle, Nancy says:

"There's a lot of work yet to be done here at Western.

"Libby creates a great role model to encourage the Western community to get moving, and also shows the results that can come from dedication and commitment to a personal goal of excellence."

Other staff in the Fitness Lab include Tony Yannessa, also an Exercise Specialist in the Health and Fitness Laboratory. He and Libby handle various appointments, do individual consultations on various topics and often speak to community groups on subjects related to wellness.

Bobbie Warren is Office Associate.

Megan Lavery is a certified massage therapist, and the Center employs WKU students, some of whom are trained to work in the Fitness Lab, and some for general duties.

The Center encourages WKU faculty, staff and students and community members of all abilities and all levels of fitness to utilize its services, which include fitness assessment, health risk appraisals, testing. (See page 6).

Over the winter months, Greaney will be in training, mostly running. There's a marathon in December in Alabama. She's working on developing an aerobic base over the winter.

"It's like earning interest on money," she says. "You can't do it until you have money in the bank. Toward the end of the season, I'll start to peak. I like to call it refinement."

All the commitment to training can be a lonely process, and isolating, even Libby admits, and she appreciates positive support from her friends.

In the recent Triathlon when she finished first woman and sixth overall, behind five men, out of more than 100 competitors, it felt good, Libby admitted.

In a society that, even in the 90s, is still surprised by certain accomplishments of women, Libby has a ready answer:

"What very strong athletic women do learn is that when we do go by men in races, we smile as we do it."

WOMAN

All about the WKU Student Health Service & Wellness Center

A health lifestyle encompasses many areas which comprise total health. The positive and negative choices a person makes in one area affect all other areas. Wellness promotion at this University maximizes the opportunities for individuals to enjoy an active, high-performance, and high-quality life.

The Wellness Center in the Raymond B. Preston Health & Activities Center is a division of the WKU Student Health Service & Wellness Center.

Programs and services are designed to promote good health and fitness for WKU students, faculty, staff and the community.

The Fitness Laboratory provides health & fitness assessment, prescription, consultation and training services.

Assessment Services include:

- Basic Fitness Assessment
- Weight Training Orientation
- Body Composition
- Personal Wellness Profile
- Health and Fitness Screening, including Nutrition Profile

Positive Lifestyle Programs offered during the year encourage and support lifestyle changes.

They include:

- Hillwalker's Club
- Health Topics Workshops
- Massage Therapy Service
- Health & Fitness Reference Center
- Internet Connection (Include internet address here)

A Health & Fitness Reference Center provides current information. Wellness Center hours are Monday through Fridays from 8 a.m. until 4:30 p.m. and Tuesdays until 8 p.m. during the school year and 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. in summer.

Persons may schedule appointments by coming to the Wellness Center and filling out any appropriate paper work, paying any fees, and getting a receipt and appointment card.

Drop-in services which do not require an appointment include:

- height & weight
- blood pressure check
- body composition (except tank method)
- computerized self-assessments
- Health & Fitness Reference Center

The Wellness Center phone is 502-745-6531.

Six added to WKU Alumni Board

Six members were added to the Western Kentucky University Alumni Association's Board of Directors during Homecoming activities in October.

They are: Leon Augusty of Brentwood, Tenn., consultant CPA, vice president and general manager of Hancock County Farm Supply Inc.; Robert Kirby of Bowling Green, investment broker and trust officer of Hilliard Lyons; Dan Lanham of Owensboro, secretary/treasurer of Lanham Brothers General Contractors Inc.; Bev Humphrey of Park Hills, non-profit social services accountant; John Lovett of Benton, retiree circuit judge and attorney and

New board officers are: Gary Broady of Franklin, president of Franklin Bank; Doris Thomas of Smiths Grove, president and vice president, human resources and marketing, Commonwealth Health Corp.; and Rick Wilson, Bowling Green, president-elect and senior vice president, Bowling Green Bank & Trust Co.

Give Earth A Chance For The FUTURE

The WKU campus is recycling, effective this month, according to Mark E. Struss, Director of Facilities Management.

"Our primary target for recycling is mixed office paper from academic and administrative buildings," Struss says, adding, "Experience and surveys show this is the single largest category of recyclable materials generated on this or any other college campus."

Mixed office paper, Struss says, includes "virtually all paper products found in your office with the exception of newspaper and catalogs."

Struss says every desk will be equipped with recycling containers.

"We are also asking individuals and departments to let us know of any special needs that may exist," Struss says, citing some special cases as those which generate a large amount of waste paper or high quality computer paper.

Struss says the university will not be recycling aluminum cans. "Our observations have led us to conclude that this issue is being dealt with at the individual, departmental level to such an extent that aluminum cans do not pose a significant impact on the total volume of our solid waste," he says, adding:

"We believe strongly in the concept of recycling as being environmentally sound as well as economically advantageous. We are pleased to be able to offer this service to the campus community. The success of the program will hinge on our individual efforts. We encourage your participation, questions and suggestions."

For senior adults only

Western Kentucky University's Institute for Living and Learning (WILL) is in its third semester of classes for students over the age of 50.

WILL is a peer-led organization sponsored by Western allowing senior adults to pursue their own learning interests at a comfortable pace.

Classes meet one each week, WILL President, Dr. Robert Melville says.

Dr. Melville is a retired member of Western's education faculty.

"There are no tests, quizzes, homework or books, and courses are conducted by mediators who volunteer their time," says Dr. Melville.

Western is one of about 100 institutions in the United States sponsoring the institute. The only other in Kentucky is located at Bellarmine College in Louisville.

Even though the programs must be linked to a college or to a university, the seniors control the classes and have direct input into how they are conveyed, says Dr. Melville, adding that a 15-member committee makes decisions on classes offered.

"The emphasis of WILL is on short courses," says Dr. Melville, adding classes on bird watching, World War II, finance and investment, computer science and literature have been offered, as well as many others.

Seniors interested in enrolling in the program may call Western's Office for Continuing Education, 502-745-1910.

Expanded library hours

Helm-Cravens Libraries expanded hours this fall, allowing access by students and faculty until midnight every day of the week.

The expanded hours are in response to Western's implementation of Moving to a New Level, which allowed funds to hire additional staff for the libraries, according to Brian Coutts, Library Public Services Department.

Weekday hours are now 7:45 a.m. until midnight; Saturdays 9 a.m. until midnight and Sundays 1 p.m. until midnight.

Artists invite public to their studios

WKU art faculty and alumni are represented in the World's Greatest Studio Tour & Sale Nov. 2 and 3 in downtown Bowling Green.

They join a total of 29 of the area's leading artists who are opening their studios to the public. Collages, drawings, hand-pulled prints, jewelry, paintings, photographs, stained glass, sculpture and weavings will be exhibited and available for purchase.

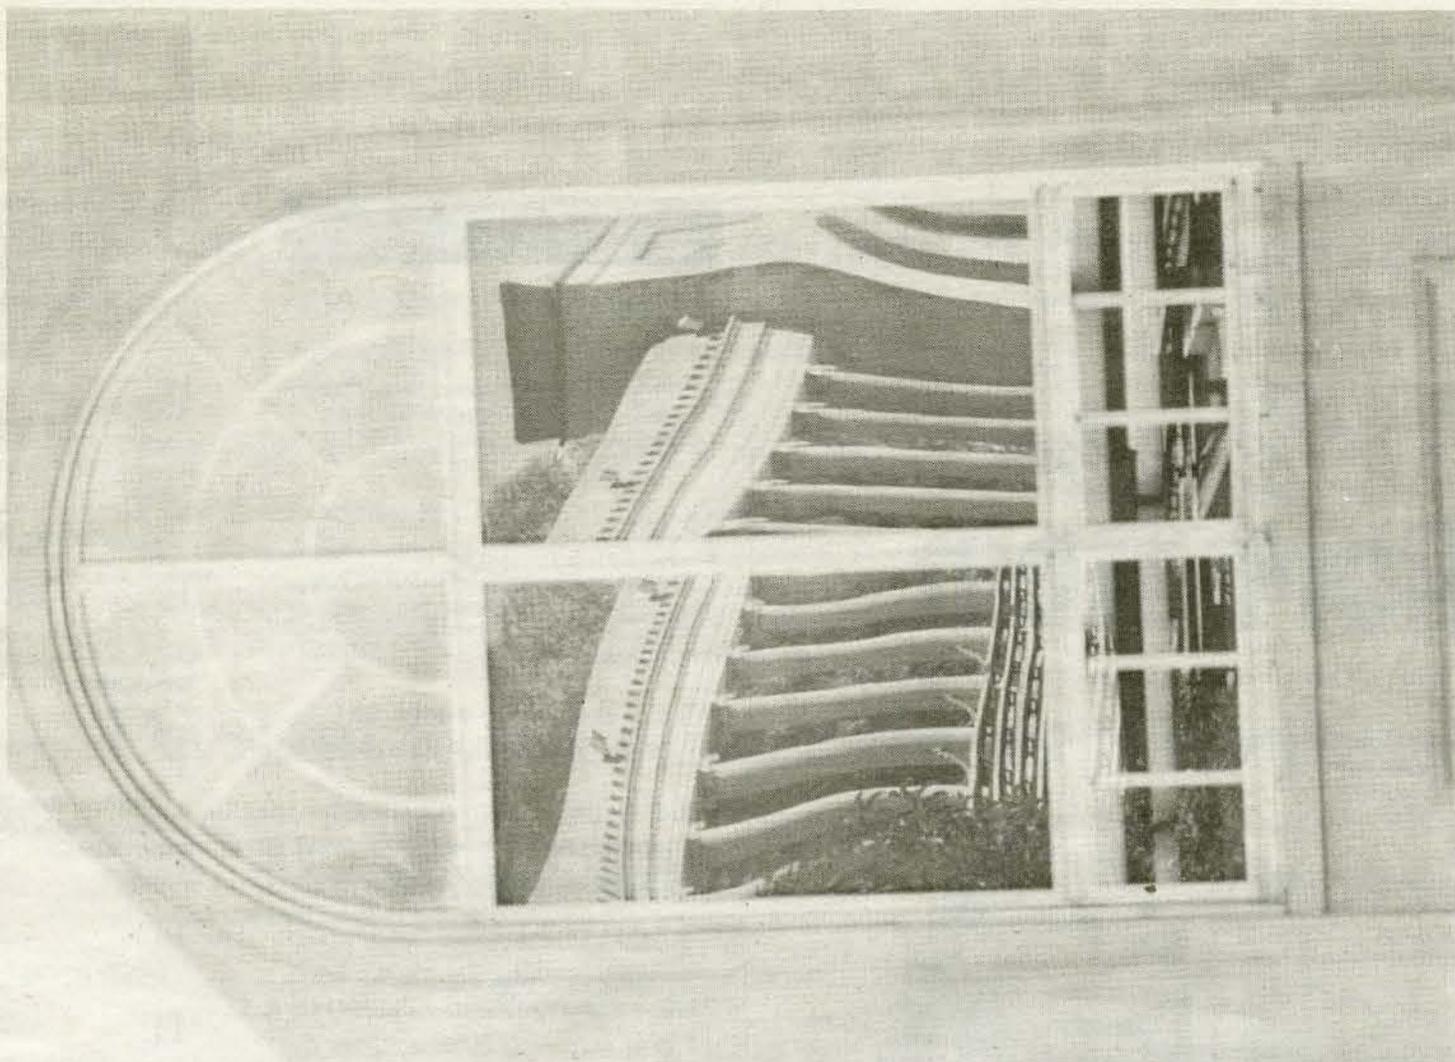

The event is free and artists will discuss discount prices.

Yellow street signs will be posted, indicating locations of artists' studios.
Participating from WKU are: David Jones, Jacqui A. Lubbers, John Mandile, Charles H. Forrester, Marsha Heidbrink, Delaire Rowe and Susan Webb.

For more information, call Marsha Heidbrink, 502-783-0106.
