men, masculinities, travel and tourism

edited by thomas thurnell-read and mark casey

GENDERS AND SEXUALITIES IN THE SOCIAL SCIENCES
Contents

Notes on Contributors vii

1 Introduction Mark Casey and Thomas Thurnell-Read 1

Part I Hegemonic Masculinity, Travel and Tourism

2 Masculinity, Tourism and Adventure in English Nineteenth-Century Travel Fiction Helen Goodman 13

3 Heroes and Villains: Travel, Risk and Masculinity Kristin Lozanski 28

4 ‘Just Blokes Doing Blokes’ Stuff’: Risk, Gender and the Collective Performance of Masculinity during the Eastern European Stag Tour Weekend Thomas Thurnell-Read 43

5 Masculinity and the Gay Games: A Consideration of Hegemonic and Queer Debates Nigel Jarvis 58

Part II Masculinities, Tourism and Identity

6 Working-Class Men’s Masculinities on the Spanish Costas: Watching ITV’s Benidorm Mark Casey 75

7 ‘You Get a Reputation If You’re from the Valleys’: The Stigmatisation of Place in Young Working-Class Men’s Lives Michael R. M. Ward 89

8 ‘I Don’t Want to Think I Am a Prostitute’: Embodied Geographies of Men, Masculinities and Clubbing in Seminyak, Bali, Indonesia Gordon Waitt and Kevin Markwell 104
vi Contents

9 Ephemeral Masculinities? Tracking Men, Partners and Fathers in the Geography of Family Holidays 120
   Rosalina Costa

Part III Sex, Sexuality, Tourism and Masculinity

10 Taiwanese Men’s Wife-Finding Tours in Southeast Asian Countries and China 141
   Chun-Yu Lin

11 Risky Business: How Gender, Race, and Culture Influence the Culture of Risk-Taking among Sex Tourists 156
   Yasmina Katsulis

12 Recognising Homoeroticism in Male Gay Tourism: A Mexican Perspective 171
   J. Carlos Monterrubio and Álvaro López-López

Part IV Embodying Masculine Travel

13 The Lads Just Playing Away: An Ethnography with England’s Hooligan Fringe during the 2006 World Cup 189
   James Treadwell

   Monica Gilli and Elisabetta Ruspini

15 Afterword: Men’s Touristic Practices: How Men Think They’re Men and Know Their Place 219
   Hazel Andrews

Index 231
9
Ephemeral Masculinities? Tracking Men, Partners and Fathers in the Geography of Family Holidays

Rosalina Costa

Whereas holidays commonly represent leisure time away from work (for adults) or school (for children), family holidays seem to evoke a more complicated picture. Significantly, the notion of a holiday as a time ‘without the watch’ (Daly, 1996), where there is no need to manage family schedules linking house–school–work, is particularly heuristic. Additionally, the physical and/or psychological distance from the world of paid work helps to foster aspirations of an increased chance of absolute and unconditional enjoyment for parents and children being together. Parents recognise that the short time they spend during the year with children may somehow be filled by the investment in a holiday time together (Gillis, 2000). Even though children have other opportunities for holidays (e.g., with the grandparents or in summer camps), the possibility of enjoying quality time together is perceived as a temporary opportunity, almost ephemeral, to be the family that the constraints of the daily life do not allow.

Often desired and planned by adults for different places outside the familiar environment and ‘away from home’, holidays mark a ‘distinct time’ in the annual calendar of families. Time and place are, thus, fundamental coordinates to understand not only what family holidays actually are but also what they are to be: different and socially constructed experiences of dreams and anticipation. This is especially true for both middle-class and working-class families, since both daily face the lack and the pressure of time. For these, holidays are moreover idealised as a time and space away from unpaid household work and the subsequent gender division (Sinclair, 1997; Coltrane, 1998; Carr, 2011). However, holidays with small children always involve, in some degree, domestic