Bowden's indexes are supplemented by later figures compiled in an unpublished study of the National Research Project, for which we are indebted to Alexander Gourvitch and David Weintraub. The data for the whole period are summarized in the latter source, Part II, Chapter H, pp. 59-61.

NOTES TO TABLE E2

Expenditure figures for 1942 include operation only, but the 1903 figures include also most state government outlays, because they cannot be segregated. Expenditures by public enterprises and contributions from general government funds to public enterprises are excluded. Transfer payments to the public, other than interest on the public debt, are included. Apportionments, mainly by state governments, are entirely excluded in 1942, but included in 1903, so that expenditures in that year are overestimated, particularly for highways and education.

There are numerous differences in classification between 1903 and 1942. Wherever possible, the 1903 data were fitted into the 1942 classification. The 1903 classifications "general government" and "courts" were combined into "general government", and "military and police", "fire department", and "miscellaneous protection to life and property" were combined into "protection", though in both cases there are slight incomparabilities in the figures for the two years. "Health conservation", "charities", and "insane" were combined into "health, hospitals, and public welfare" although it is not clear whether hospitals are included in the 1903 figure. "Education" in 1903 includes libraries, which are in the miscellaneous category in 1942. In both years, the miscellaneous category probably includes some items which would be more properly classified under one of the other classifications.

Expenditure data for 1942 are from the Census Bureau's Revised Summary of State and Local Government Finances in 1942 (1948), and the 1903 data are from the Census Bureau's Wealth, Debt, and Taxation, 1903.

The employment data are divided into school and nonschool workers. Full-time equivalent nonschool employment is estimated by adding one-third the number of temporary and part-time workers to the number of permanent full-time nonschool employees. The figures for school employment are from the Census Bureau's Public Employment in the U. S.: 1941 (State and Local Government Quarterly Employment Survey, Vol. 2, No. 1, August 1941). They actually cover the school year 1939-40 and are taken by the Census Bureau from the Biennial Survey of Education in the U. S.: 1938-40, but, according to the Census Bureau, school employment in January 1941 was probably about the same as in 1939-40, judging from nonschool employment. The data on nonschool employment are from Public Employment in the U. S.: January 1942 (State and Local Government Quarterly Employment Survey, Vol. 3, No. 5, December 1942).

The population data used to derive the per capita figures are for the census years 1900 and 1940, as are the figures for density and degree of urbanization. Arizona, New Mexico, and Oklahoma had not been admitted as states in 1900, but the expenditures of their territorial and local governments are included. The population figure for Oklahoma in 1900 includes Indian Territory.

The income figures are averages of income payments per capita for the five years 1938-42 from the Survey of Current Business, August 1949.

NOTES TO TABLE E3

Per capita expenditure is in dollars per capita (in 1942 prices); urbanization is percentage of population in cities of 2,500 or more; density is population per square mile.

Figures in parentheses are standard errors of the coefficients.

The basic data appear in Table E2. The 1903 expenditures were put into 1942 prices by multiplying by the following ratios of 1942 to 1903 prices (see footnote 8, Ch. 6): 2.065, for nonschool functions; 3.508, for schools. The implicit price ratio for total expenditures, derived from the individual functions, is 2.584, which differs a bit from the price ratio in footnote 8, Ch. 6, 2.454, because of differences in weights.

For 1942 we have equations for the following subdivisions of two functions:

	CONSTANT TERM	REGRESSION COEFFICIENT OF INDEPENDENT VARIABLE		COEFFICIENT OF MULTIPLE CORRELA- TION
		Urbanization	Density
Public safety
Police	-.33	.0558 (.0087)	.0008 (.0011)	.83
