Patients with severe liver fibrosis are at higher risk of complications and may benefit from early treatment. "The presence of cirrhosis increases the risk of complications and may indicate the need for earlier treatment." The authors emphasize the importance of early intervention to prevent further progression of liver disease and to improve patient outcomes. "Early intervention can help prevent complications and improve patient outcomes."