Publisher's note

For years, academic articles have been published in a similar layout - a format which starts with an abstract and ends with a conclusion and a list of references. Articles were presented in this way with the reader of the printed version in mind. However as most researchers now access articles online, readership styles and how information is gathered have changed quite considerably.

In order to enhance the online article, and to adapt to the needs of our community, we are introducing research highlights:

- Research highlights are a short collection of bullet points that convey the core findings and provide readers with a quick textual overview of the article. These three or four bullet points highlight what is distinctive about the research and describe the essence of the article. Research highlights are mandatory for this journal. For more information and examples, please see: www.elsevier.com/researchhighlights

User surveys have indicated that readers highly appreciate both this feature. We hope that it will allow readers to quickly gain an understanding of the article, serve as a navigation mechanism to specific sub-sections of the results and figures; and to encourage browsing, promote interdisciplinary scholarship and help readers identify more quickly which papers are most relevant to their research interests.
