In the 1949 Cary Grant movie, I Was a Male War Bride, there is a scene where Captain Rochard (played by Grant) walks through a military building in search of his superior officer. As he moves through the corridors of power, he decodes the letters on the door signs: WAIRCO expands to 'War Administration Industrial Relations Coordinators Office'; SOSDPPDD becomes 'Service Or Supplies Displaced Persons Property Disposal Department.' Rochard starts on another sign: LADIES. He starts the process – 'Labour Administration Department Inter ...' – at which point a slightly blushing, young lady officer walks through the door.
